PHNOM PENH — Vietnamese Communist forces have completely encircled the town of Takeo 54 miles south of the Cambodian capital and have now pressed to within 22 miles of here, reports indicated today.

And fears are growing that the continued indiscriminate slaughter of Vietnamese civilians by Cambodian soldiers will touch off a counter-massacre by avenging Viet Cong troops.

Friday there were reports of the new slaying of at least 100 Vietnamese civilians in a detention camp at Takeo, a provincial capital. And today Cambodian police and soldiers conducted a house-to-house search for suspected Viet Cong.

Most Cambodian military men freely admit they consider all Vietnamese to be Viet Cong and one soldier, in confirming the death count of at least a hundred Vietnamese in Takeo, said "We shot them because they were Viet Cong."

The official version, from Col. Kong Chhath, the regional Cambodian government and military commander, was that these newest massacre victims were killed in a crossfire Thursday night when Viet Cong troops inflitrated Takeo.

But a survivor said it was deliberate genocide.

"They told us to lie down, that we should sleep," said La Van Pa, a Vietnamese in his fifties. "Then the soldiers began to shoot with both rifles and machine guns. It continued for so long."

As the Viet Cong forces pressed the Cambodians harder military officials including Maj. Penn Rannde, base commander of the Cambodian Air Force, reiterated a plea for arms aid from the United States.

"What we need most are fighter planes," he said. "Maybe 30 or 40. We hope the Americans will supply them."

Here in Phnom Penh a high-ranking Cambodian officer painted a bleak picture of the conflict.

"All our frontier outposts have been abandoned or lost," he said.

In Prasaut, which had fallen last week to the Viet Cong onslaught, Cambodian troops discovered Friday that the Communists had slipped out of the

Mass Slayings Admitted

By T. D. ALLMAN

TAKEO, Cambodia (WP) — In this usually peaceful town Friday, I saw the bodies of three Vietnamese civilians slaughtered by their Cambodian captors. Other Vietnamese said that the Cambodians had killed or wounded another 150 of them Thursday night and had hauled away the bodies during the darkness.

As at Prasaut two weeks ago, when nearly 100 Vietnamese were massacred, the Cambodians call their victims "Viet Cong."

About 50 Vietnamese survived this latest slaughter, which they said took place Thursday night. Time correspondent Robert Anson and I have managed to rescue one survivor — a boy of 10 — and with other reporters we are trying to save some of the others.'

ORDERED KILLINGS

The man who ordered the massacre in Prasaut is here in Takeo. He is a Cambodian paratroop captain. He's more than six feet tall — a rarity in this country. He is a military professional. So far he has refused to give his name to reporters.

But in less than one month, he has ordered the deaths of about 340 Vietnamese civilians — including men, women and children. Journalists interviewed him following the Prasaut massacre in Svay Rieng province.

He admitted ordering the mass slayings there "because they were Viet Cong."

He was transferred to this usually placid little provincial capital, south of Phnom Penh. One of his first acts was to order about 200 Vietnamese men and boys rounded up and held in detention in the primary school here.

I saw them Wednesday, crowded into an open-walled building on the school's grounds.

Friday, Anson and I drove down to Takeo. It was a "no news" day; journalists

Alaskan Senator Backs Canada's Arctic Stand

WARRENTON, Va. (CP) — Alaskan Senator Mike Gravel came to the defence of Canada on the Arctic sovereignty issue Friday night, calling for more talking and less fighting between two traditionally-friendly neighbors.

He told a conference on Canadian studies that Canadian plans to extend its pollution controls 100 miles offshore in the Arctic demonstrates "a strong sense of concern for the safety of our Arctic environment."

"I would hope that my government, in replying to the Canadian position, would focus not on traditional legislative parameters, but more constructively on the broader questions of intent," the Democratic senator said.

"This is not the time to quarrel with our best friends."

Gravel said he admired the decisiveness of Prime Minister Trudeau in submitting the legislation calling for a 12-mile territorial limit and jurisdiction for a 100-mile "anti-pollution zone" in Arctic waters.

WORTH THE RUCKUS

"If it takes a unilateral political act such as the Canadian declaration to focus our attention on the issues, then that act is well worth the ruckus," he said.

The U.S. has rejected outright the Canadian proposal which would change the existing three-mile limit observed by both countries, and has called for an international conference or submission to the World Court to settle the dispute.

"I find it hard to fault the prime minister's argument that this is an area in which the law has not yet caught up with technology," Gravel said.

"Certainly close collaboration is in order between the U.S. and Canada in the face of the imminent exploitation of Arctic resources in order to ensure adequate protection of our Arctic ecology."

SHARE SAME INTERESTS

The U.S., he said, shares with Canada virtually identical interests in the Arctic, and it should be the first to recognize intelligent innovation on the Canadian side and be willing to meet the Canadians half way.

Fishing Zones Grow With 12-Mile Limit

OTTAWA (CP) — External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp said Friday that by extending its territorial sea to 12 miles from three, Canada can declare as exclusive fishing zones the Gulf of St. Lawrence, Bay of Fundy, Dixon Entrance, Hecate Strait and Queen Charlotte Sound.

In the Northwest Passage, it would establish Barrow Strait and Prince of Wales Strait as subject to complete Canadian sovereignty, Mr. Sharp told the Commons.

OPENS DEBATE

The minister was opening Commons debate on second reading of the government bill to extend Canada's territorial sea, a move under protest by the U.S. state department.

Earlier, the Commons completed debate on another bill the Americans say they won't recognize. It would establish 100-mile shipping safety zones in the Arctic which ships could enter only after passing a rigid inspecton by Canada.

Voting on the Arctic pollution bill was delayed until next Wednesday when the government is expected to call for a standing vote. This would show the international community that all political parties are united in the government move to protect the Arctic from disastrous oil spills or other pollution.

Mr. Sharp said the main reason Canada is acting alone in proclaiming a 12-mile territorial sea is to have effective jurisdiction to enforce anti-pollution controls off its Arctic, East and West coasts.

The new limit also would allow Canada to speed up the concluding of negotiations with European countries permitted to continue fishing in the nine-mile fishing zone now in effect.

Highest Civilian Medal Awarded Apollo 13 Crew

ABOARD IWO JIMA (AP) — As the Apollo 13 astronauts journeyed to Hawaii aboard this ship today, President Nixon presented the Medal of Freedom to the United States space agency's flight control team and said the troubled flight was "not a failure" because it "reached the hearts of millions of people."

Standing in front of a model of the moon lander Aquarius at the spacecraft centre in Houston, President Nixon presented the highest U.S. civilian award to the Mission Control team which guided the crippled Apollo 13 flight safely back to earth.

He said he was "speaking for people all over the world" in thanking the space workers "who made it possible for the astronauts to return to earth."

REUNITED

Astronauts James A. Lovell, John L. Swigert and Fred W. Haise, will reunite with their families and meet the president in Hawaii.

Mrs. Lovell, three of her children, Mrs. Haise and her three children and the parents of Swigert, a bachelor, accompanied the presidential party from the space centre. They will fly to Hawaii aboard the presidential jet to greet the astronauts.

A score or more demonstrators stood in the crowd of several hundred as the president arrived at the space centre. They held such signs as: "Poor people care about astronauts. Who cares about poor people?"

It Was a Great Party . . . And Then the Trouble Started

— By BRYAN McGILL

"Man, is this great!" we, an aging trio of 30-year-olds, agreed.

We were in the Churchill Hotel beer parlor lapping up the sudden change in atmosphere that began Wednesday when 19-year-olds were declared old enough to drink legally.

It was a Friday night in the pub we could hardly believe was happening.

The place was jammed with young people, many standing and sitting on the floor. Droves of 10 and 15 were continually going in and out of the door.

Trays of beer were sloshed away faster than the harried waiters could sling them.

HARP SOUNDS

Guitar, recorder and harp sounds could be heard in the din.

"Do you see what's tattoed on that guy's knuckles?" asked friend Tony, referring to one of the babyfaced six.

"No."

"H-A-T-E."

KIND OF CREEPY

Now there was a word that didn't fit. We looked at the pleasant peachfuzzy face again, and shrugged it off. "Kind of creepy."

But a few hours later that word best described what happened.

A curly-headed youth sitting among a dozen others had drenched a table of middle-aged men with a water pistol. That incident started it all.

A little later, after they were called by the hotel, four policemen entered the beer parlor and threaded their way nervously towards the Sundance Kid.

A chorus of "oink, oink, oink" went up from a booing, jeering crowd. The policemen looked jittery and unsure of themselves.

One policeman went around to where Sundance was sitting and informed him that they were escorting him out and that they wanted no trouble.

The youth decided to play out his role. He jumped up at the officer and shoved him back on to our table, spilling our beers.

We cursed the youth's stupidity.

The policemen quickly got Sundance under control, arm twisted behind back, and made their way towards the Langley Street exit.

The bad vibrations had started.

Pair Plead Not Guilty To Assaulting Police

Two men pleaded not guilty in provincial court today to assaulting police officers, both charges arising out of a fracas Friday night at the Churchill Hotel on Government Street.

Lorne Parsons, 20, who gave his address as 1353 Pandora, pleaded not guilty to assaulting Constable Arthur Cooper, while James O. Erdman, 24, no fixed address, pleaded not guilty to assaulting Constables Ronald Stewart and Walter Sagert.

A third man, William Whyte, 24, was fined $25 for causing a disturbance at the rear of the Churchill Hotel. He pleaded guilty.

He admitted being involved in a fight.

Judge William Ostler set bail at $1,000 for Parsons — as requested by Prosecutor Cory Stolte.

When the judge asked Stolte if there was any reason to request such a high bail, the prosecutor replied:

"I can only describe it as a riot — under normal circumstances."

Stolte requested bail be set at $3,000 or two sureties for Erdman, but the judge fixed it at $2,500.

In the fracas, Const. Sagert was treated at Royal Jubilee Hospital for head injures. He was released. He was struck on the ear by a beer bottle.

YOUTH SHOT DEAD IN BURN-BANK BID

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — A youth was killed by sniper fire early today as young activists broke into a Bank of America branch at nearby Goleta Valley and attempted to set it afire, sheriff's deputies said.

Sheriff's Capt, Fritz Patterson said the youth was dead on arrival at hospital.

The shooting occurred at the rear of the bank branch after the doors had been smashed and a Molotov cocktail was thrown inside, deputies said.

Sheriff's officers quietly escorted 15 of the demonstrators away from the ceremony site.

Aboard the Iwo Jima Friday night, the astronauts got their first good rest in a long time.

Lovell and Swigert indicated at a shipboard dinner that they were not always sure of that safe return.

Swigert told ship's officers attending the dinner that the best part of the flight for him was getting out of the spacecraft and seing the carrier Iwo Jima waiting for them.

FELT UNSURE

"At times," he said, "we thought we would never see it."

Lovell, a four-times space flight veteran, recalled that returning from space on Apollo 8: "I remembered how much we don't realize what we have on earth until we leave it. This time, looking back and feeling just that much farther out, I was not too sure where we would end."

Haise, suffering from a mild infection, did not attend the dinner. He rested in his cabin.

The safe return of the astronauts ended a desperate drama which began Monday night when an explosion rocked their spacecraft as they headed toward the moon. It stripped away much of their electricity and cancelled their moon-landing plans.

Tornadoes Kill 20

CLARENDON, Tex. (AP) — Tornadoes sweeping across Texas killed at least 20 persons and injured 111 Friday night and today. Twelve of those killed were in a trailer park filled mainly with retired persons.

Authorities feared more bodies may be found when communications are restored.

The tornado laid waste a retirement village of trailer homes called Sherwood Shores on Greenbelt Lake, five miles north of Clarendon in the Texas Panhandle.

The state patrol reported 12 persons killed there and 50 injured.

At least six other persons died in tornadoes which swept for 175 miles from near the New Mexico border west of Lubbock almost to the Oklahoma border east and north of Amarillo.

BOY KILLED BY CAR

PORT ALBERNI (CP)—Daniel Gaudreault, five, was killed here Friday night after he apparently ran from between two parked cars and was struck by a passing car.

POLICE, PARADERS BATTLE WITH CLUBS

OTTAWA (CP) — An anti-Vietnam war demonstration in front of the United States Embassy today broke into a bloody, stick-swinging clash between police and demonstrators.

Blood could be seen running down the faces of some demonstrators and police officers.

It was not immediately clear what caused the outburst but within seconds about a dozen police and many of the 50 or so marchers were pounding each other with clubs and placards.

town, leaving a portrait of deposed Prince Norodom Sihanouk on a chair in the centre of the town.

The Viet Cong first captured Prasaut, 80 miles from the Cambodian capital, April 11 after a massacre of Vietnamese civilians which government sources attributed to a crossfire during a Viet Cong attack.

Meanwhile, hundreds of bodies which floated down the Mekong River through the week apparently came from the tiny island of Ta Chhor and were those of victims of a series of executions by government sources, according to local residents.

Ta Chhor is just four miles upstream from the ferry crossing where at least 400 bodies have so far been counted.

The residents said they heard brief bursts of firing nightly on the island, which is normally uninhabited but where local fishermen sometimes farm small plots of corn during the day.

Meanwhile in Washington the United States government is reported giving consideration to supplying limited arms aid to Cambodia. An official request from Gen. Lon Nol, Cambodia's military government leader, was delivered earlier this week.

Speculation is that any U.S. aid would be for self-defence only to checkmate any threat by Vietnamese Communist forces to overrun the capital.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS

Cloudy skies and rain associated with a low pressure centre moving down the coast will give way to sunny skies on Sunday as the disturbance moves south of the province. Over the interior patchy cloudiness persisted today but sunny skies will return there on Sunday.

The Weather and You

By CARL RIBLET JR.

Old Jeff, the retired Wyoming cowboy, is pretty bald. But he takes care of the fringe that remains around his head just as though he had a headful of hair. He said he likes to see the warm weather come because it helps hair to grow. I blinked and grinned at him, and he tried to prove his theory.

"I read once in the old Police Gazette that if a fellow kept an accurate, up-to-date calendar on his hair, he could figure how much it grows from month to month. And he just might discover that though hair doesn't grow like weeds, it does grow faster in summer.

"My barber told me that most men's hair is oilier—women, too, I suppose—in hot weather because the heat peps up the oil glands. The heat also stimulates the hair and helps to make it grow faster."

I told you once before, Old Jeff has an opinion about everything.

lounged by the palm-fringed swimming pool at the venerable Hotel Le Royals. We had just finished a sumptuous French lunch, which ended with chocolate souffle.

The hour's drive to Takeo passes through tranquil countryside, with jitney buses competing with cows and bullock carts for a place on the road. Except for a convoy of ammunition trucks near Phnom Penh, we saw nothing to remind us that Cambodia is at war.

Even in Takeo, there was the typical air of peace that characterizes the tranquillity of a lazy afternoon in a Cambodian market town.

On our way to see the paratroop captain, whom we jokingly call "Killer," I had an idea. "Let's go see those Vietnamese to see if they're all right," I said.

We drove our small car into the school compound. From a distance of 40 feet we could see the blood-stained walls. Before, there had been about 200 Vietnamese men and boys crowded into the enclosure. Now there were less than 50.

'THEY KILLED THEM!'

We jumped out of our car, and ran, nearly slipping in the blood, into the enclosure. "Where are the others?" I asked in French. An old Vietnamese man, with a wispy Ho Chi Minh beard, said, "They killed them all last night. They will kill us all tonight. They say we are Viet Cong. But we are just shopkeepers."

Three bodies lay to one side. "They killed them last night at seven thirty," said another Vietnamese man.

"They took the bodies away at two in the morning. Two truckloads of the dead and badly wounded—150 in all."

"Can you save my brother?" he pleaded.

A man about 30 with at least five bullet wounds in him lay on the concrete floor, the straw mat upon which he lay soaked with blood. He and the others had received no medical attention although Takeo has a hospital.

TIRED, SCARED

Near him lay a boy about 10 years old with two bullet wounds in his mangled leg.

Cambodian soldiers came up and motioned us away, They seemed tired and scared.

"Are you Viet Cong?" I asked the Vietnamese.

"We have lived here all our lives. We are not Viet Cong," said the old man. "Stay with us, or they will kill us, too."

The old man and his friends spoke calmly.

Anson talked to the guard while I planned.

"Can we take the child?" I asked.

Answered another man, "Take all the wounded," he said, "or they will die."

We took the child and lay him on the back seat of the car.

NO STOPS

We roared back to Phnom Penh, not stopping at any of the check-points. The Vietnamese boy held my hand tightly. Anson kept asking, "He's not dead, is he?"

We stopped at the first Catholic church we found in Phnom Penh. The French priest led us to a French hospital near the hotel Le Royale.

After fretting about who would pay the bills for the boy, the nurses finally let him in.

Then a French doctor came.

"Who are you?" he asked. "Who are his parents? Oh, he has a gun wound."

CONG GRENADE

"You know," he said as he gave the child oxygen, "you must not think it is only the Cambodians who do this. I was down in Takeo last week and I patched up 15 Cambodians wounded by a Viet Cong grenade."

I ran out to get back in the car to reach Takeo by dark. Already other journalists who had heard Anson were rushing to their cars.

At Takeo, I had asked one of the soldiers, "Was there an attack here? Is that why you killed them?"

He was ashamed, but said: "No, we were ordered. The Viet Cong are our enemies and all Vietnamese are Viet Cong. They were ready to help the Viet Cong if they came."

"We will take all the wounded you can bring us," said the French doctor.

If we are lucky, we shall have more wounded for him to stitch up. If we are not, all we will have are dead Vietnamese shopkeepers and small farmers, all born and raised in Cambodia and with no affiliation with the Viet Cong, for the photographers to take pictures of.

. . . AND THEN TROUBLE STARTED

A few minutes later everyone started pouring out on Langley. Someone had yelled: "The pigs are beating up a head."

When I got out on the street the scene had become ugly.

The crowd of well over a hundred was pressing in around a Black Maria, one police car and a handful of scared policemen.

They were yelling "pig, pig, pig."

Suddenly about a dozen youths rushed the police. Beer glasses went flying through the air.

Two of three policemen were wrestling off the youths with their backs to the Black Maria.

GONE CRAZY

This was ridiculous. Everyone had gone crazy. They were really worked up, even though they were trying to follow a script written up for riot scenes in the U.S.

After a few seconds the scuffles ended, and the police looked dazed and even more scared.

ARRESTED

The police, with three youths arrested, cautiously got into their vehicles and left the scene.

Many of the crowd floated back into the pub.

Two long-haired youths were now kicking a man in a brown suit. People jammed around. The fight went careening down an aisle.

It broke off. The man, with blood trickling out of his nose and mouth, looked glazedly up from the floor at a circle of unsympathetic faces.

The lights blinked off and on. People were splitting fast now.

A couple of young friends were telling me that the police had beaten up the youth out on the street and that was why the crowd was so angry.

PAVEMENT

"They pounded him in the stomach and hit his head against the pavement," one girl said.

"When I saw what they were doing to him I just had to yell 'pig'," said a university student.

No flower children these. "A lot of repressed people around," said Tony.

Except for a dozen broken beer glasses, there was no damage, hotel co-owner Jim Riddoch said this morning.

It was record beer-selling night for him.

He blamed the melee on five or six people. The rest were "onlookers".

"It's been like a big party since Wednesday. You can't blame the young people for celebrating," he said.

"It will go back to normal pretty soon."

RALLY HITS COMPLICITY IN VIETNAM

Carrying signs protesting Canadian complicity in the Vietnam war, about 25 demonstrators set off from the Legislative Buildings at noon today, en route to a 3 p.m. protest rally at Centennial Square.

Along the way, they planned to dramatize their protest through guerilla theatre. Characters in a mock war included Vietnamese peasant (Frank Coz wearing a Vietnamese flag), an American capitalist, played by Lorne De Girolamo, and a U.S. Soldier, Reg Dagnall.

Some of the demonstrators came from the Institute of Adult Studies, some from Claremont High School and some from the University of Victoria.

One of the signs read: Hands off Vietnam; Hands off Canada.

Icebreaker Returns To Seattle

SEATTLE (AP) — A happy crowd of relatives and friends was on hand Friday when the overdue Coast Guard icebreaker Northwind nudged her ice-raked sides up to Pier 91.

The Northwind, which left Seattle Jan. 2 was 17 days overdue. She spent most of the extra time trapped or virtually immobilized in the Bering Sea ice.

After she broke free from the ice pack, her homeward voyage was further delayed when she damaged a propeller in comparatively light ice.

The Northwind was on winter patrol to study the ice pack, which was up to 65 feet thick along the icebreaker's 1,750-mile Bering Sea cruise.

Mayor Launched Winner With Press Conference

BY JIM HUME

Mayor Courtney Haddock launched a winner Wednesday when city officials played host to ivory tower press types to unveil details of the city's $6.3 million capital budget.

Far more articulate than usual, the mayor made a firm and convincing pitch for support for the five-year program. He even convinced some of the editorial writers and commentators that a five-year program is easier on the taxpayers' pocket book than a yearly upward lurch of taxes.

Hume

It was, by any standard, a good press conference with the weighty-thinking scribes out in full force.

You can always tell the editorial penmen in such events. They're a little paler than the average guy and wander around in a sort of bewildered way, like a mole in bright sunshine. Well, they don't get downtown very often.

Anyway, the soiree got the budget off to a flying start.

Sometime within the next couple of days the six billboards donated for the city's use will sprout with their pre-vote message. (Maybe a seventh could be brought into action on Douglas Street. Most people know how to spell Haddock now and the pre-December election message is a mite old.)

And early next week everybody at city hall, from city manager down to clerk-typist one, will go on a letter addressing binge in order to get 17,500 pieces of hand-addressed envelopes in the mail.

The hand-addressing bee—it works out to about 150 envelopes per worker—was the brain-child of Ald. Harold Olafson. It's sad, but true, that such tricks of the political trade are required to stimulate interest in civic issues.

INSIDE CITY HALL

And even with each piece of information mail hand-inscribed, the turn-out to the polls will be shockingly low.

My guess is that the city will be lucky if the vote tops the 27-per-cent mark. City manager Dennis Young is more optimistic. He feels that April 30 will see more than 30 per cent of the eligible voters trekking to one of the five available polling stations.

Young is also confident that the referendum will pass with more than 75 per cent of those voting in favor. I'm calling for a pass with between 70 and 72 per cent in favor.

The majority would be much higher if all 17,500 eligible voters cast ballots. Alas, it's usually the protesters who take the time and trouble to head for the polling booth to make their point.

Friday afternoon city hall brass pulled one of its smarter moves in the budget campaign.

Gathered in the upper lounge of the McPherson Playhouse were just about all of the city hall staff members who, one way or another, bump into the public on a dialy basis.

With the mayor as lead-off speaker and half a dozen assorted department heads as back up, the staff got a good rundown on the various programs in the budget.

The reason? So that this time around they will be able to answer questions asked of them by worried taxpayers.

Haddock had a good message for the gathering.

"One of the most important rules of salesmanship is to never, ever, say 'I don't know' when asked a question. You should always say I'll find out'."

And that, basically, is what he asked city staff to do during the next 11 days; provide the answers they can and find the answers when they get stuck.

Following the briefing, a sandwich snack and cup of coffee were served. And such was the conversation that treasurer Jim Bramley was seen to smile and have half of a second sandwich.

When "Bram" is optimistic, all's well with the world.

Labor Quits Human Rights Body

The 18-month strike against Hy Fidelity Photos Ltd. has prompted the Victoria Labor Council to withdraw its membership in the British Columbia Human Rights Council.

Since it began, the strike force has dwindled to two women, members of the Teamsters' miscellaneous workers, who stopped work over the company's owners, Mortifee Munshaw Ltd. refusal to recognize their union.

Labor council secretary Larry Ryan told a meeting Wednesday the decision to withdraw came after he learned A. W. S. Mortifee of the Vancouver-based firm is vice-chairman of the Human Rights Council.

The labor council ratified the move after Ryan argued that Mortifee's position in the strike situation ran counter to his position on the rights council.

Ryan had written to Joseph Katz, chairman of the rights council, calling Mortifee's position a "startling anomaly" in light of his refusal to permit employees a choice of unions.

Guilty Plea

TRAIL (CP) — Terrance Bird, 18, of Trail, changed his plea to guilty Friday and was sentenced to six months definite and two years indeterminate for assaulting a juvenile girl. Bird also received similar concurrent sentences for dangerous driving and possession of a concealed weapon.

SPIRO BLASTS SPACE CRITICS

WASHINGTON (WP) — Vice President Spiro T. Agnew charged Friday night that "social levellers of the new left" will seize upon the near-disaster of Apollo 13 to demand that the space budget be "soaked down into the nearest slum."

Speaking at a banquet of 1,200 Republican leaders here, Agnew said it would be a "short-sighted, tragic blunder" to heed the warnings of "fair-weather friends" of the space program who are "readying the lifeboats for a quick exit."

Agnew's speech followed a brief appearance by President Nixon, who also lavished praise on the astronauts but made no mention of space program critics.

Accident Raises Spectre of Death

WASHINGTON (WP) — An old fact became harshly apparent in the past five days: men could be lost in space.

The United States has no prospect of being able to rescue them before developing a reusable space shuttle plane, maybe in the late 1970s.

That will depend entirely on whether or not Congress decides within the next few years to increase the shrinking space budget by as much as a billion dollars a year.

The Apollo 13 men could have been lost if their guidance or rockets had failed to put them on the proper course and they had bounced off the earth's atmosphere Friday, skipping into far space to be stranded.

They could have been lost if their accident had occurred on their long voyage home, when they had no lunar module "lifeboat" to supply emergency oxygen and power.

An Apollo moon trip today costs $350 to $500 million. Flying a rescue rocket and crew from another launch pad might cost another $200 million.

RELIABLE SYSTEMS

So far, neither space officials nor astronauts nor congressmen have felt it is worth spending that much on rescue. The space agency philosophy has been to spend every cent possible on reliable systems with reliable backups, then go.

But space officials and space scientists have all recognized the need for a cheaper, reusable transportation system to replace the costly one-time rocket. The agency is now studying development of space shuttle craft — to take off with rocket boosters, then glide back to earth for aircraft-type landings.

Most U.S. spacemen see this as a tandem project with a big, permanent space station — with space station modules becoming eventual spaceships for manned voyages to planets like Mars.

The space budget is $4 billion this year. President Nixon has proposed just $3.3 billion for fiscal 1971, a cut that jolted space leaders.

SHUTTLE CRAFT

To build the first shuttle craft and first 12-man unit of a big space station by 1977, said Dr. Wernher Von Braun two weeks ago, would take "on the order of a billion dollars more a year." If the goal were 1977, fiscal 1972 would have to see an added $300 million with the extra billion or so starting in 1973.

It may or may not be forthcoming. Several members of Congress have already announced their intention to shoot at Nixon's $3.3 billion, though the Senate Space Committee seeks to add 300 million.

The space science and technology panel of the President's Science Advisory Committee has offered a possible middle course in manned space: developing the shuttle without an immediate decision on a big space station, and using it as a satellite installer and repairer, as well as the rescue craft of the future.

PUBLISHERS ELECT PROVINCE MAN

TORONTO (CP) — Fred S. Auger, Vancouver Province, has been elected president of the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association.

Other officers elected were C. B. Macgillivray, Thunder Bay Times-Journal, first vice-president; E. B. Richards, Toronto Globe and Mail, second vice-president and W. C. Rankin, Toronto Star, treasurer.

F. I. Ker, of Hamilton, was named honorary president.

Israel Criticized

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (AP) — Lusaka, Zambia, will be the site for a summit conference of non-aligned nations later this year, delegates from 60 countries decided Friday at the end of a 4½-day preparatory conference. The delegates also approved a communique expressing grave concern at "the escalation of military actions against civilian populations by Israel" and reaffirmed "the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territories by war."

THREE WEEKENDS ON CAMPUS
The purpose of this program is to provide residents of Greater Victoria with an opportunity to live and study at the University. Accommodation will be in University residences and instruction by members of faculty. The program consists of three separate weekends from Friday evening to Sunday noon. Each weekend will be directed towards a different topic from three areas of University study. Faculty from the Departments of Music, English and History in Art will act as Resident Tutors for group instruction and will also guide individual learning.
Central to each weekend will be the direct involvement of participants in subject matter to be studied. Live musical performances, literature readings and visits to the University's Maltwood Museum will supplement lectures and discussion. Participants will be encouraged to learn from each other as well as from Resident Tutors. An informal atmosphere will be maintained.
May 8 - 10, Music Weekend, Resident Tutor — Leslie Thimmig
May 22 - 24, Literature Weekend, Resident Tutor — Lawrence Russell
May 29 - 31, Art History Weekend, Resident Tutor — Richard Morris

'Courage and Cool Heads'

THE SAFE LANDING OF THE three United States astronauts despite the hazards of their stricken space vehicle was greeted with world-wide relief and admiration. Failure of the moon mission, with its new and chilling dangers, demanded even greater technical competence and human courage than a perfect mechanical performance would have done. These qualities proved available in abundance, both in the space capsule and on the ground.

In a very real sense the incident should do much more for the United States than the actual scientific achievement involved. At a time when the nation could well do with a boost in morale and unity, the ill-fated moon voyage showed again, and beyond doubt, that the United States can produce human and technical resources second to none in the world. Achievement in triumph is one thing, and a fine one; but response to emergency, competence under pressure, are what distinguish true ability. This the astronauts and their ground support demonstrated on a grand scale, and Americans everywhere—somewhat as Britons did when a Commonwealth climber won world acclaim by conquering Mt. Everest at a critical time—can take heart and determination from these exemplary representatives of their country.

Among the plaudits from all parts of the planet the comment of the Soviet newspaper Tass summed up the general reaction. It praised the astronauts and their ground crews for "working in very complicated conditions ... with courage and cool heads". That could constitute good advice for any nation today, Russia no less than the United States. And in a similar vein is the comment of Dr. T. O. Paine, administrator of NASA, who sees that the space program can learn more from the difficulties just experienced than it would from a flawless landing on the moon.

In this light, too, the United States can read a lesson; and all its friends, and particularly its closest northern neighbor, will wish it future success not only in space exploration, which it rightly will continue undaunted, but also in overcoming the other wider problems which now afflict it and hamper its full emergence into the splendor it should enjoy.

Little Talent, Less Taste

ASSISTED BY $10 MILLIONS OF the taxpayers' money, the Canadian Film Development Corporation has had a part in financing two feature-length films that have met with a total lack of applause from critics and bare toleration from the public. The first of these efforts, entitled Explosion, detailed the doings of a psychotic draft-dodger on a rampage in Vancouver. In a recent Toronto paper, the second effort entitled Flick It!, describes itself this way: "heavy music, raw horror, naked ladies, gratuitous violence and Frankenstein monsters don't make a great movie ... but they don't hurt!"

They do hurt, and most Canadians could not agree more with the first part of the statement — that violence, horror and monsters do not make a great movie. What these elements do make is a facsimile of what the world's movie industries have been churning out with boring regularity. Exaggerated movie sex, violence and horror are tolerable if they make a valid point and constitute an integral part of a story. But the Toronto advertisement for Flick It reads suspiciously like a come-on for naive voyeurs.

If Canadians are going to produce viable films at the expense of the taxpayers, then the films should be Canadian in theme and content and of some artistic or social value. Repeating what has already been done ad nauseum by Hollywood, Italy and France will never make Canadian films successful. The National Film Board has shown that this nation can produce artistic and commercially successful films that win world-wide critical acclaim. At Expo 70, the NFB film entitled simply The Land, has helped to make our pavilion one of the most popular of them all.

Inundated as Canada is by foreign influences, it is a waste of money to burden the art of film-making with still more mediocre reproductions of dubious taste. Those who are responsible for doling out public financial aid to would-be film producers should keep this in mind. In the precarious medium of film-making a few failures will be forgiven, but the public will not have its money frittered away on projects that pander to the lowest transient commercial motives. Canadians know good films can be made here; the CFDC should get on with the job and stop financing imitations.

An Issue For the Canadian Conscience

A DEPRESSING PICTURE OF living conditions for Eskimos and the potentially bleak future ahead of them has been given to Canadians by Michael Marsden in a lecture tour which brought him, to the Canadian Club here this week. Scattered sparsely over a huge and inhospitable area, they live above exceptionally rich natural resources which they are unable to exploit and are largely spectators of today's money-making developments in the far north. Their housing is inferior, their earnings meagre and their population, small though it is, is outstripping the traditional means of natural sustenance available to them.

Mr. Marsden makes a plea for government allocation of a major sum — the figure of $700 millions was mentioned — from the earnings of which assistance could be provided for these people of the far north. That is one approach but, by itself, an inadequate one.

The task ahead of our society, if it is to discharge its human responsibility to the Eskimo, is to provide those opportunities permitting him to take a decent place in the 20th century from which he cannot escape. Efforts so far have been of minimal success only.

The federal government has made educational provision for the Eskimo and found him a ready pupil, particularly in the mechanical field.

But this has yielded only questionable returns. To enjoy the amenities of today, he must move south and his chance of making a successful transition to urban life is reduced by social pressures which few can withstand.

Mr. Marsden says a multitude of studies have been made on the Eskimos: "We know all we need to know about them . . . What is needed now is action to help them."

Effective action cannot be long delayed if the Eskimo is to survive. Mr. Marsden has not been able to provide a full answer to the problem, but at least he has brought an eye witness's opinion of the situation and helped to stir the conscience of Canadians to seek an answer to a Canadian dilemma.

Letter

Enough is enough

Pressure, all too often accompanied by force or the threat of force, seems to be the motivating factor in today's world.

Students join together and by mass action compel universities to capitulate and governments to increase their grants. Unions coerce employers into giving them more money. Doctors and lawyers, the most rigidly organized of all, refuse any restrictions on their right to gouge the public through excessive fees. Big businesses, often by combinations in restraint of trade, keep prices on an ever upward path. And so the cost of living mounts from month to month in a dangerous spiral, the end of which no one can foresee.

Now someone has to pay for all this and unfortunately it is the most defenceless group of all, the old and disabled and those whose income remains almost constant from year to year.

Isn't it about time that some organizing genius brought all these people together in a great organization dedicated to the proposition that enough is enough and that the oldsters refuse to be the fall guys of the economy any longer? Perhaps their slogan could be "Pensioners of the world unite, you have nothing to lose but the hopelessness of your present position." — F. L. P. Anderson, 430 Chester.

Restraints on Counter-Offensive in Cambodia

CAMBODIA became, this past week, the world's latest small country to cry for help from a marauding Communist invader. Rarely has the free world had more impelling reasons of self-interest to respond affirmatively. It is not simply that Cambodia has recently switched sides — ousting an unpredictable neutralist leader, aligning itself solidly on the side of the free world, and thus making of itself a kind of test case. It is that the Cambodian turnabout alters significantly, in the allies' favor, the terms and conditions of the Vietnam fighting, providing opportunities which, if fully exploited, could greatly improve the prospects of success in the war.

Frye

What has happened is that the Vietnamese Communists have been challenged in their use of strategically important sanctuaries on Cambodian soil.

Whereas previously the Reds had virtually uninhibited access to these sanctuaries for rest and resupply, subject only to occasional allied harassment, now they have been forced to fight the Cambodian army in order to continue using them. The Communist offensive in Cambodia is an effort to nail down that privilege.

Moral Position

The Cambodian army is not the most formidable combat force in the world. But the fact that it is engaged makes the moral position crystal clear; and if the allies were to close the other side of the vise, attacking the Reds from the rear (as they have done on isolated occasion), the enemy might be thoroughly put to rout.

In such a case, the scale on which Hanoi and the Viet Cong could conduct future operations in South Vietnam would be significantly reduced. There may be no such thing as "victory" in Vietnam, but this could be a reasonable facsimile.

A shift by Yugoslavia in 1949, similar in effect to that of Cambodia today, enabled Greece to succeed in suppressing the first major Communist guerrilla war of the mid-20th Century.

What Cambodian Premier Lon Nol asked for this week was arms. What he should get is manpower and massive support operations — a full-scale allied counter-offensive against the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong in Cambodia.

Among the useful by-products of such an action would be the prospect that North Vietnam's interest in a peace conference for all of Indo-China would be stimulated. Hanoi would have two new things to gain from such a conference; security for its forces, and a greater prospect of genuine neutralism in Cambodia.

There is, moreover, further justification for a counter-offensive. Two years ago the United States agreed with Hanoi to limit the scope of the fighting. The bombing halt was one result.

Hanoi continues to break its part of the bargain. Just this past week, Saigon once again was subjected to rocket attack. This kind of action was clearly ruled out, as were attacks on other major population centres.

Restraint should not indefinitely be a one-way street.

● The value of Cambodia's posture as a nominal neutral. For her to become visibly a full-scale military ally of the United States and South Vietnam would be to undercut the persuasiveness of her voice in the diplomatic arena, including the UN, if her case comes here.

Memories being short, it might give a color of justification to what is now a bald and indefensible North Vietnamese invasion of Cambodia.

● The vulnerability of the new Cambodian regime at home. Until that regime is solidly grounded in power, the appearance of too close an alliance with the United States could complicate its bid for popular support. Neutrality is widely favored in Cambodia.

● The no-more-Vietnams syndrome in the United States, notably in Congress. Political restraints on the use of American forces in a new arena — even though it is in fact the same war — are very strong.

Most Significant

The latter inhibition is, of course, the most significant. President Nixon may not, in fact, now have the option of significant American operations in Cambodia. The momentum of withdrawal has become self-perpetuating.

It is sad; but of such ironies is history made. The chance to win in Vietnam may have presented itself at a time when political and diplomatic restraints, heightened by war-weariness, prevented its acceptance.

And the United States, which often in history, through dogged courage, has fended off disaster — indeed, which set out to do so exactly 195 years ago today — seems determined now, equally doggedly, to fend off possible success.

Nature Rambles

By FREEMAN KING

At this time of the year the trans-Canada air passenger flying from Vancouver catches an early view of the bright green that is the pasture land of the Fraser Valley, then the dark green dots below of the conifer forest reaching toward the mountain tops. Then come the great snow-capped peaks of the mountain ranges with their shaded valleys that carry the thread-like rivers down to the lakes and sea.

Cold and aloof, they seem to proclaim themselves the true wilderness not to be disturbed or destroyed by mere man. But eventually time will take them down and rebuild them again. Their eternal snowcaps make it possible for man and all living things to survive. They are ageless and ever new.

The peaks and passes, with the deep valleys, break up the great winds that come in from the ocean carrying life-giving waters that the green below may live.

As the flight progresses, the long rolling foothills of the eastern slope fold down to the great flat lands, and there the vastness of the Prairies reaches as far as one can see, north to the land of the little sticks and the tundra of the Arctic.

One looks and sees the "patches" that are frozen lakes and sloughs, holding the land's "lifeblood" in trust for the long hot summer days to come and promising refuge and food to the multitude of birds that will migrate north to their ancestral nesting grounds.

As you look down, the roads leading into towns and villages run like tiny threads holding them together.

In the Great Lakes country, the picture changes again, for here we see the rocky mounds and huge outcrops with their networks of lakes and streams now covered with ice and snow. In a short time they will carry water down to the great inland seas.

These seas will enable man to move his goods to the interland and allow residents there to send out food for the ever-hungry world.

Eastward the ribbons of communications grow larger and, ever-expanding, lead to the large cities and towns, blanketed in a haze of smoke.

Then come the great arterial highways with their ant-like traffic rushing from here to there — in a hurry for what? The networks of highways and overpasses, clover leafs that destroy the good earth even amaze man who created them.

Calling the Watchdog to Heel for Doing His Job

IN the face of opposition probings and protests the prime minister on Monday endorsed the criticisms of the auditor-general expressed earlier by Donald Macdonald, government House leader and Bud Drury, president of the Treasury Board. Mr. Drury's allegation, in his words of Saturday, is that the auditor general (in his annual report) "has expressed his view as to the appropriateness of some government policies. Now in this sense he's pitting his judgment as to sound business practice, sound governmental policy, against the government . . ."

Western

In a long series of questions Conservative and New Democratic members sought to ascertain precisely how Mr. Henderson had trespassed on the policy field; in what respect he had gone beyond his authority as set out by statute. After a series of generalized answers, Mr. Douglas asked whether it was the contention of the government that comments about the remissions of over $180 millions in duties to automobile manufacturers represented an invasion of the policy field. Mr. Trudeau agreed that this would be an example.

Either the government takes a very narrow view of Mr. Henderson's "watchdog" role or else it places a very broad interpretation on the term "policy."

The duties of the auditor general are set out in the Financial Administration Act. He is to examine and report to the House of Commons the results of his examination of expenditure and revenue transactions in the preceding year.

He "shall call attention to every case in which he has observed that:

● Any officer or employee has wilfully or negligently omitted to collect or receive any money belonging to Canada,

● Any public money was not duly accounted for and paid into the consolidated revenue fund,

● Any appropriation was exceeded or was applied to a purpose or in a manner not authorized by Parliament,

● An expenditure was not authorized or was not properly vouched or certified,

● There has been a deficiency or loss through the fraud, default or mistake of any person, or

● A special warrant authorized the payment of any money, and to any other case that the auditor general considers should be brought to the notice of the House of Commons."

It will be apparent that these are very broad responsibilities and certainly they have not been narrowed by custom. With the enormous growth of government, the rising public concern about waste has been recognized by successive committees on public accounts. For example, Mr. Henderson regularly reports details of non-productive payments; this at the direct request of the committee on public accounts.

Scope of Audit

Section 67 of the act deals with the scope of the audit. Since it is directly relevant to Mr. Trudeau's example, it should be quoted.

"The auditor general shall examine in such manner as he may deem necessary the accounts relating to the consolidated revenue fund and to public property and shall ascertain whether in his opinion:

● The accounts have been faithfully and properly kept,

● All public money has been fully accounted for, and the rules and procedures applied are sufficient to secure an effective check on the assessment, collection and proper allocation of the revenue,

● Money has been expended for the purposes for which it was appropriated by parliament, and the expenditures have been made as authorized, and

● Essential records are maintained and the rules and procedures applied are sufficient to safeguard and control public property.

Mr. Henderson is also charged with carrying out a Legislative audit, satisfying himself that transactions relating to the consolidated revenue fund and to public property conform to the statutes of Canada as well as to established constitutional practice.

Avoided Policy Criticism

At no time did Mr. Henderson criticize the automobile agreement. Any such criticism would have been an invasion of the policy field.

What he said this year and in previous reports was that "the procedures followed by the customs and excise division . . . in administering the concessions were not adequate to protect the revenue." In light of the above, what is wrong with that?

Specifically, the auditor general complained of the lack of records on duty owing or on the total imports for which a manufacturer must account.

He has been saying for years, not that the Tariff Order of 1965 was wrong but that the government did not collect taxes from manufacturers who failed to qualify under the order. Was this not his duty? The government could not deny the facts because in January 1969 it passed a special order-in-council to forgive amounts owing and now estimated at more than $180 million.

Is it contended that Mr. Henderson should not have reported this because ministers entered objections last year when his observations were considered by the public accounts committee? This would be strange because the committee has yet to report on the matter.

Mr. Henderson said that officials of the departments of industry and finance appear to place greater emphasis on criteria which are not in the tariff order than on certain criteria which are included.

The sin of the auditor general, is, apparently, his suggestion that, for the protection of the revenue, the criteria ought to be included in the tariff order. But he is required by statute to satisfy himself that "procedures applied are sufficient to secure an effective check on the assessment, collection and proper allocation of the revenue." In the circumstances he is not and cannot be satisfied.

It is seven years since the Conservatives left office and in consequence most of Mr. Henderson's findings now cause embarrassment to the Liberal government. But it was not always so. No complaints were made of his earlier reports which probed waste and irregularities chargeable to the Conservative administration.

Usefulness Impaired

The attacks on the auditor general are objectionable for two reasons. The first is that, as a non-political public servant, he cannot reply. The second is that they impair his usefulness.

The public accounts committee recommended three years ago that, to ensure the independence of Mr. Henderson's office and to improve Parliamentary control of public funds, a separate Auditor General of Canada Act should be passed. Mr. Trudeau has now indicated that such legislation will be introduced at the present session.

It will be important, in view of the government's mood at the present time, to ensure that the bill serves the purposes originally intended and that it is not, instead, a means of clipping the wings of the auditor general or, more simply, of getting rid of Mr. Henderson.

Accused's Right of Silence Outdated Now?

By MR. JUSTICE EDSON HAINES

MR. JUSTICE HAINES

It is the duty of a judge to declare the law, not reform it . . .

I want to make it clear that I am not speaking as a judge, I am expressing my personal views concerning what I consider the number one problem of our Western world—the challenge of law enforcement.

In my opinion, unless we truly recognize that challenge and solve its problems we must face the fact that a society which cannot enforce its laws must perish.

I submit that the greatest obstacle to efficient criminal law enforcement in Anglo-American jurisdictions is the right of the accused to remain silent.

It is a luxury society can no longer afford. It contributes to the high success ratio of crime. It frustrates the police, comforts criminals and encourages disrespect for the law.

And with great deference to the legal profession, the abolition of the right to remain silent is necessary to save an honorable profession from its own dishonor.

What is this right to remain silent and how did it come about?

The rules about admissibility of statements by accused persons are very ancient. They arose in medieval time when illiterate prisoners often were subject to torture in order to extort confessions.

The statements thus obtained were made in the hope of escaping further suffering, so were untrue and not to be relied upon. It must also be remembered in those days the accused could not testify, call witnesses or be defended by a lawyer.

Equally important were the large number of offences punishable by death. A man could be hanged for stealing a sheep. But today there are no such reasons.

In the middle of this Twentieth Century what possible reason can exist for not asking the accused in a public court all reasonable questions pertaining to the offence?

Actually when we compare our modern civil procedure with our criminal procedure we discover a somewhat schizophrenic process.

On the civil side full disclosure becomes the hallmark. Both parties to the litigation must set forth their position in what we call pleadings, make production of relevant documents, submit to pre-trial examination under oath, and for the better resolution of the dispute the court may order inspection of documents and property in the hands of third parties.

All pre-trial utterances by the parties are admissible in proof of the facts asserted. The trial judge and counsel may comment on the failure of either party to testify or produce evidence.

In brief, our rules of civil procedure are calculated to get at the truth and take the sporting element out of litigation. Hence the vast majority of civil cases are resolved by settlement.

The criminal side is quite different. The entire process does resemble a game. Despite his right to remain silent, if perchance the accused does make pre-trial utterances to a police officer, before they can be used against him the prosecution must prove they were voluntary.

On being charged he is entitled at a preliminary hearing to examine all witnesses for the prosecution and thus obtain discovery of their evidence.

He is also entitled to know the nature of other evidence to be called at his trial and of any fact in the possession of the prosecution which might help him, while on his part he remains silent, and under no circumstances can be compelled to disclose the nature of his defence, produce a document or make any admission.

At his trial his counsel can cross-examine the Crown witnesses at length and challenge their probity even when he knows they are telling the truth, and then at the end of the Crown's case can elect to call no evidence.

Or if he chooses he can then for the first time present a defence. It may be an alibi which, sprung on the prosecution on such short notice, cannot be checked.

He may plead drunkeness, provocation, insanity, automatism, say the deed was committed by someone else, or give such version of the facts as he sees fit. None of this need be disclosed to the prosecution beforehand.

Then when the evidence is all in the judge must tell the jury that the accused is at all times presumed innocent until the prosecution has proven his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt; further the judge must tell the jury that even if they do not accept the evidence of the defence, if that evidence leaves them with any doubt about the case for the prosecution they must acquit.

They jury must be unanimous, and neither the judge nor the Crown Attorney may comment on the failure of the accused or his spouse to testify.

If our Canadian courts used the same rules to try civil cases, the Canadian public would soon find a better way of resolving its disputes.

Apart from those founded on the Anglo-Saxon, the task of the judge in most foreign systems of law is akin to that of the laboratory, to ascertain the real truth by all proper means.

Essentially the inquiry into the circumstances devolves upon the court and the investigating judge or officer may take considerable time in developing the evidence both for and in favor of the accused.

Frequently those injured in the incident giving rise to the charge are also represented and it is not unusual for the verdict to deal not only with guilt or innocence but also with civil responsibility so that all matters may be concluded in the one proceeding.

Complicated rules of evidence are unknown. The tendency is to admit all testimony on the theory that the court gives to all evidence the weight it deserves.

The accused is questioned as the facts are developed during the investigation and his explanations are checked out by the court, which also searches out and examines witnesses for the accused.

Serious trials often commence with the examination of the accused which has the advantage at the outset of discovering those areas in dispute and those about which there is no controversy.

They really try the man as well as the facts. Consequently the record of the accused, good or bad, is before the court.

A feature emphasized in many jurisdictions is that the acquittal of the guilty is a threat to the security of society.

And it is interesting to note that when the Allies were formulating the rules for the military courts in Germany in 1945 they adopted the inquisitorial system and made each accused a compellable witness.

How does this right to remain silent affect the volume of crime? The simple answer is that it encourages crime by enhancing the chances of success in avoiding detection and conviction. The criminal is living in a golden age, said Lord Shawcross recently.

In a message to Congress in March, 1965, President Lyndon Johnson said: "Crime is running wild — some city streets are turning into jungles — murderers, rapists, muggers, robbers are on the loose in cities and suburbs."

Why is the criminal living in a golden age? Because crime is so successful.

Governments exist chiefly to foster the rights and interests of its citizens — to protect their homes and property, their persons and their lives. And each citizen is entitled to ask, "What is wrong with a system that does not protect?"

My submission is, simply, require every criminal suspect to answer all reasonable questions and, if he refuses to answer or lies, draw the appropriate inferences.

Give to the people when a crime has been committed, the same rights it gives to an individual who has been robbed. In a word make the accused a compellable witness. Rid ourselves of the rules that give the criminal such an advantage.

One completely false assumption accounts for a great deal of public misunderstanding as to the need for police interrogation. It is a fallacy created and perpetuated to a very considerable extent by mystery writers, television and the movies.

Proceeding on the false premise that, whenever a crime is committed, if the police would only look carefully at the crime scene they will almost always find some clue that will lead them to the offender and at the same time establish his guilt. This is pure fiction.

In real life the situation is quite different. In many circumstances physical clues are entirely absent. The only approach to a possible solution is the interrogation of the suspect and others who may possess useful information. Furthermore, the suspect and his associates are often men of considerable criminal sophistication and interrogation must be conducted with skill and persistence. Professor Fred E. Inbau, one of the leading U.S. authorities on crime detection, says:

Many criminal cases, even when investigated by the best-qualified police departments, are capable of solution only by means of an admission or confession from the guilty individual or upon the basis of information obtained from the questioning of other criminal suspects.

"Criminal offenders, except, of course, those caught in the commission of their crimes, ordinarily will not admit their guilt unless questioned under conditions of privacy, and for a period of perhaps several hours.

"In dealing with criminal offenders and consequently also with criminal suspects who may actually be innocent the interrogator must of necessity employ less-refined methods than are considered appropriate for the transaction of ordinary everyday affairs by and between law-abiding citizens."

It would seem obvious that the simplest and most effective way of discovering the truth is under proper safeguards to ask the person most likely to know all about the incident, namely the suspect.

In conclusion I pose a question. Are we today clinging to the right to remain silent because of what we do to men and women found guilty? If so we are doing exactly what the judges did in medieval times when they developed the rule — to protect the offender from undeserving cruelty. In that event the law must wait on the reform of our correction services. Perhaps the changes must come together.

'Appears to Be a Distorted Concern For Strengthening Hand of the State'

THE GLOBE AND MAIL
An Editorial

Mr. Justice Edson Haines makes a number of flat-footed assertions to support his recommendation that the right of an accused person to remain silent should be abolished.

He says the right is the greatest obstacle there is to efficient criminal law enforcement; that it encourages crime by improving the chances of getting away with it; that it has convinced the public that the ends of justice are being frustrated; and that there are lawyers who can't, or won't, see "how many criminals skilled in the law are taking advantage of them."

He quotes some opinions but no facts to support these rather startling statements. And so it can be accepted as nothing more and nothing less than another opinion—certainly far from conclusive, but entitled to some weight since it is given by a distinguished Supreme Court judge.

What are the facts? The most telling are to be found in the report of the Canadian Committee on Corrections under Mr. Justice Roger Ouimet of Quebec and G. Arthur Martin of Ontario, chairman and vice-chairman, respectively.

Ignore Withdrawals

"The Dominion Bureau of Statistics shows that convictions are registered against approximately 90 per cent of those charged with indictable offences in Canada," it says. ". . . the DBS ignores withdrawals in arriving at the conviction rate. If withdrawals were counted as acquittals, the conviction rate would be substantially lower and the acquittal rate correspondingly higher.

"It must also be remembered that a very large percentage of the convictions are registered as a result of pleas of guilty. Although statistics are not collected by the DBS to show the percentage of convictions which result from pleas of guilty, it is believed by law enforcement officers that at least 40 to 50 per cent of all convictions for indictable offences are the result of pleas of guilty.

Limited Studies

"These figures are supported by limited studies which have been made. If 50 per cent of all convictions result from pleas of guilty the conviction rate in respect of charges which are tried on a plea of not guilty would be approximately 81 per cent, and the acquittal rate in respect of such charges would be approximately 19 per cent."

It is the percentages of 81 and 19 that are important because these statistics refer to the period just before Ontario's new legal aid plan came into effect. The plan is expected to substantially reduce the number of cases in which guilty pleas are entered by undefended accused.

So, the right to refuse to take the witness stand doesn't seem to have been an obstacle to justice—or at least a very big obstacle—despite what Mr. Justice Haines says. And on that assertion all his other assertions stand or fall. Right now they look prostrate.

The disturbing aspect of the speech is its dominant undertone of what appears to be a distorted concern for strengthening the hand of the state.

In part, at least, Mr. Justice Haines seems mesmerized by the rising level of lawlessness and violence in the United States without questioning whether the same situation exists here. Certainly without questioning whether our laws and law enforcement methods are different.

Taking all that he says together, what he seems to be suggesting is that we need a new kind of system. And he shows a marked preference for what he calls the inquisitorial approach. An apt name.

He hints that rules of evidence are a hindrance and that the accused's full record, good or bad, should be before the court.

Latitude for Police

He quotes without indicating the slightest disapproval suggestions that police should have wide latitude in questioning suspects using "less refined methods" than they would with law-abiding citizens.

He says the accused should be forced to disclose their defence before trial and forced to take the stand and undergo cross-examination.

And he winds up by saying that "the guilt-finding process should be secondary," thereby leaving the court and counsel to concentrate on what to do with the accused after he is convicted.

Never in the history of our law has the guilt or innocence of an accused been a matter of secondary concern.

An Uneven Battle

The protections available to an accused are there for a purpose. They are there because the battle over his innocence is uneven. He must face the entire wealth and weight of the state.

It has computerized information, means of electronic surveillance and a horde of highly specialized investigators.

It has its choice of charges to invoke and the weight of respectability on its side. Above all, there is the psychological impact that the state and its resources can have on an accused in the police station or in the witness chair.

Forum for the Young Idea

By ART STOTT

It seems to me that the authorities have missed the main benefit flowing from the age-of-majority legislation and the right it gives people from 19 years up to drink legally. This permits the late teen-ager, at a stage in life when he or she knows all the answers, to join in a meeting of minds within an environment conducive to settlement of all the world's great issues.

My generation and the generations before it harbored a lot of misconceptions. We thought there might be hope for solutions of major problems through the exchange of ideas at thinkers' conferences and widely heralded meetings between distinguished international figures. We ignored the one venue, the one group of people and the one atmosphere in which truth invariably prevails—around the beer parlor table.

It is true, of course, that voices are occasionally raised in loud argument in the pub. But they can be subdued and amity restored by the simplest of phrases: "Let me buy the next round."

To paraphrase old Omar, myself when young did eagerly frequent such places and heard great argument. Because government was less enlightened in those days, if we happened to be under 21 we had to wear a sort of disguise to escape the bouncer—or else we had to accompany individuals of high reputation whose very presence discounted the possibility that a juvenile had sneaked in. I did both. I wore a man's hat pulled well down over my adolescent brow—and I entered as the companion of the old Esquimalt council of the day, Jimmy Elrick, reeve, Charlie Smith, Tim Farley, Tom Hadfield, Bob Anderson and Billie Cox, all councillors.

Who would throw out the scribe of so august a company? Having established my credentials—which means having been recognized by George and Tommy at the End of the Line—I ventured in with other youths on occasion, and with them solved the infinite complexities of existence.

The intellectual content of our causeries was beyond reproach. Let the subject be politics, art, athletics, social conditions, economics, international affairs, we could handle it. Had the more publicized figures of the day listened to us, their troubles would have evaporated.

Unfortunately we were in no position to push our ideas. It was always possible that one of the waiters might quell any of us with the unfair question: "How old are you, kid?" So the winnowed wisdom fell softly on the table and dissolved in splashes of suds.

All this should change now. Youth may enter with head up. Youth may expound its better ideas. Youth need no longer huddle almost furtively over a small beer. The halls of participatory democracy have been opened wide. The forum has been made available to clear-eyed, honest, straight-thinking young people whose point of view is fresh, often untroubled by facts and unsullied by experience. The new dawn has broken.

We may look now for flashes of truth within the tavern caught by minds young and shining. The expansiveness of the concept is staggering.

An aging man envies the opportunities the changes in legal age have produced. He regrets, as he must, his inability to join fully in the jocund company of wit, whimsy and wisdom that only the young can create around the crowded table. He confesses that he has forgotten some of the more important answers to the continuing problems of society—answers that he could expound only in subdued voice when entry to a pub was gained surreptitiously and circumspection was essential for the under-aged.

Things will be different now. Youth will be served—provided, of course, the ID cards are in order.

Rather hard to believe? Well it's true — Chinchilla Ranching is not only profitable, it's highly enjoyable as well. Chinchillas are regarded as the cleanest animal in the world; they have absolutely no odour and can be raised in a clean dry basement, garage or spare room. If you are interested, check the appropriate Victoria city by-law for details of any regulation re raising Chinchillas on your property.

Pelting and the sale of animals for breeding stock has become a commercial reality. The package now being offered by the Association removes many of the risks by guaranteeing the following:

 the Association provides priming, grading, killing, pelting, dressing and marketing services to all its members.

Chinchillas cost less than $3.00 a year to feed and require only about an hour a day to care for. It is one of the easiest businesses to get started in requiring a relatively small down payment — as low as $452.00. Chinchilla ranching qualifies for bank financing and provides special tax advantages.

THE CHINCHILLA ASSOCIATION OF NORTH AMERICA

Our motto "QUALITY BEFORE QUANTITY". All animals delivered by the Association as breeding stock are certified stock accompanied by a certificate of grading from either EMPRESS CHINCHILLA BREEDERS CO-OP U.S.A. (the World's largest) or NATIONAL CHINCHILLA BREEDERS OF CANADA.

Radical Left Declares Open War on Society

A rash of political bombings has raised widespread alarm and a great many questions in the United States. A team of Associated Press reporters traced the bizarre phenomenon in the centres of radicalism. Travelling thousands of miles, they interviewed activists and sympathizers, law enforcement officers and law violators, police intelligence officials, government, academic, and other authorities. This report was prepared by John Wheeler, Kenneth Hartnett and Bernard Gavzer.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hundreds of bombs exploding across the land boom out a grim warning to the United States: Tiny, but determined and growing groups of extreme-left radicals have declared war on the established way of life.

Flames from a burning California bank and hundreds of other arson attacks cast new light on the most deeply alienated of the American young who have turned their backs on non-violence and protest movements and embraced terrorism and guerrilla war.

They preach with religious fervor a single theme: Non-violence hasn't worked. Mass demonstrations won't end the Vietnam war, stop racial discrimination or wipe out poverty and pollution. Only a true revolution can change things. The political fabric of the U.S. is corrupt and must be destroyed to save the nation.

"Fight on" and "Bring the war home" are the battle cries not only of the ultra-left and black nationalists. Increasingly more moderate radicals are being swept along by such revolutionary rhetoric into at least passive support for the bombers and terrorist tactics.

Police intelligence officers in several university cities, many moderate radical leaders and extremists tend to agree that radicals in significant numbers are concluding violence is necessary now.

President Nixon, in calling last month for the death penalty for bombers who also kill, said: "The anarchic and criminal elements who perpetrate such acts deserve no more patience and indulgence. It is time to deal with them for what they are."

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover warned: "Available indicators point to a long-range problem of campus-based subversion accompanied by violence and destruction."

The FBI and police in cities assert it is impossible to say how many bombers there are loose in the land. A reasonable guess is less than 1,000. The toll of dead and wounded from bomb attacks in the last two years is about 100. However, damage is estimated to run into several million dollars.

Law enforcement officials state it is impossible to say how many bombs are set each year or how many are attributed to radicals because no such records are kept. In the last two years more than 150 bombs were set in the San Francisco Bay area. Sixty exploded in Seattle last year. In New York there were about 100.

But if those dedicated to the bomb and terrorist attacks are few, their potential to influence events as well as to destroy, kill and maim is not under-rated by law enforcement officers trying to cope with the problem.

Some FBI and police sources see the bombings as part of a continuing shift toward violence. Law enforcement agencies say that while most of the bombings probably are set off by the new left, others appear to be the work of the old left, extreme right, the political middle, those with personal grudges and the mentally ill.

Dr. John Spiegel, head of the Lemberg Centre for the Study of Violence, said: "There is an increase in violent ideology by radical young people in response to the despair that the goals the radical movement has pursued vigorously over the last eight years have not met with any apparent success.

PRACTICE SESSION for two radicals includes target shooting in Berkeley, Cal. Radicals in Berkeley and other cities are arming themselves against an expected showdown with establishment America.

—AP Wirephoto

Among the most radical, said Dr. Spiegel, "There is more and more a sense of self-sacrifice and an altruistic resignation to their fates" such as jail.

An investigation by The Associated Press focusing on key radical strongholds where some of the most intensive bombings and other destructive violence occurred showed:

—There is no proof of a large, national, centrally-directed bombing conspiracy or of any foreign involvement in those which have occurred.

—Some groups, most notably the Weathermen faction of the Students for Democratic Action, have publicly announced their commitment to violent activism and are working in underground cells. One such cell apparently was involved in the accidental detonation of explosives that destroyed a luxurious New York town house March 11. Three persons died in the blast.

—Although indictments and other evidence point to Black Panthers and other Negro extremist involvement in the bombing, the main thrust is believed coming from young whites, mostly with middle-class or wealthier backgrounds.

—Bombings are on the increase and both police and radical leaders say the tempo is being stepped up.

—Large corporations, especially those with defence contracts or large holdings in under developed countries, increasingly will become targets, radical leaders say.

—While the most publicized bombings often have been carried out with a demonstrated concern for human life, this has not always been the case.

—So far more bombers than bombed have died in explosions.

—Although bombings and other "acts of revolutionary violence" find sympathetic approval among more moderate activists, there is no indication of any mass shift in opinion to heed the call for revolution now. But out of the frustration at having failed to influence significantly the direction of events in the United States, more and more radicals are prepared to protect terrorists and, in effect, provide the sea for the most militant activists to swim in.

—Some radicals openly court repression in the belief that only martyrs and large police crackdowns will force the uncommitted to act and galvanize the deeply split, undisciplined left into a viable fighting force. Some law enforcement officials, under heavy pressure to launch such a massive crackdown, say they fear the theory is correct.

—Radicals are arming themselves in many cities with the avowed aim of "defending" themselves and their drug-music-politically-far-out alternate society which is rapidly expanding.

Relatively little is known about the bombers and their numbers because so few are caught, a fact which police say greatly influences those bent on destructive acts. Set with a timing device that lets the bomber escape, the bomb's explosion destroys most of the evidence and clues to the identity of the makers or planters.

The Vietnam war and the emergence of radical communities in the form of collectives and communes probably are key factors in explaining the new mood for destructive violence among some radicals.

Those calling for guerrilla warfare to cure what they see as serious evils in the U.S. argue passionately, the way one young radical in Berkeley did, "the greater violence of the establishment in Vietnam, Laos and elsewhere overshadows and almost blots out our violence, even bombs. And if our lesser violence stops the greater violence of the establishment, then how can it be wrong?"

It has proved a powerful argument not only in gaining new recruits but for changing the views of older radicals who were dedicated to non-violent protest, the ways of Gandhi and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

The tremendous energy of the young is setting up a society, or more exactly an anti-society. The new society gives the young a renewed sense of belonging to something. The communes and collectives often have their own doctors and lawyers. All have a pride bordering on a pioneer spirit.

They believe their society one day will and must replace the older order. They believe that as older generations come to see this, it will attack. So those who once abhorred violence now talk of the need for defence.

Radicals are arming themselves in many cities against the expected showdown with the establishment. The acceptance of "defensive violence" is becoming widespread.

The most radical leaders believe those ready for "offensive violence" still are small in number. They add they believe the swing in the extremist direction will come soon. Already some have stretched "defensive violence" to cover bombing police stations, courthouses and Reserve Officer Training Corps facilities at colleges.

Once the underground press concentrated on free love, drugs and flower power. Now it carries glowing accounts of bombings and other terrorist acts, explains in great detail about how to safely build bombs, preaches hate for "straight America," and editorializes on the necessity and inevitability of revolution.

One of the most lionized violent radicals is Cam Bishop, a Colorado State University student who became the first of the new radicals to make the FBI's 10 Most Wanted list. He is accused of dynamiting four power transmission towers.

In Berkeley, fountainhead of youthful radicalism and capital of their anti-society, an arms buildup is under way among not only radicals, but also owners of stores damaged in past riots as well as frightened and angry citizens.

The Tribe, the most respected underground paper among radicals in the area, called recently for the formation of a people's militia. Even moderates and former non-violence movement members praised the idea.

Stewart Albert, editor of the Tribe, said: "The message we are trying to present to the Fascist government is that if they come down on the brothers, they have to pay the price."

Albert was named a co-conspirator but was not indicted in the Chicago 7 conspiracy trial. He has 10 arrests on his record and two long scars on his head picked up in past riots including the one during the 1968 Democratic convention.

When they talk of police crackdowns and a future with police roundups of radicals, many term their mental state "paranoid."

Some who neither bomb nor support bombers expect to be caught up in a future political maelstrom.

As proof of the turn they see in this direction, the radicals claim that drug "busts" or arrests have become a political weapon against them. They claim searches without warrants are increasing and declare that arrested radicals get maximum sentences for possession and use of drugs while others not on the extreme left get lighter sentences or probation.

Those on the run from drug and draft charges find natural shelter in the alternate society and, together with radicalized high school students, another new development, form likely pools for bomber recruits.

Radical high school students were credited by older radicals with much of the damage during a rampage in Berkeley following the sentences for contempt at the Chicago conspiracy trial. Their propensity for violence startles even some of the more radical older members of the New Left.

The radicalizing of high school students was no mere happenstance. Older radicals saw the even younger as a source of impressive manpower. They started by distribution of leaflets, then staged seminars and offered advisers on how to stage anti-war and other protests. The drug and anti-authority parts of the older radical movement held great appeal for high school students.

Further proof of the growing polarization in the radical movement can be found on the campus of the University of Santa Barbara nestled on the edge of a traditionally conservative California community. In early March rampaging students burned a $400,000 Bank of America branch in rioting that followed two student arrests and a speech by Chicago conspiracy defence lawyer William Kunstler.

Until then, the campus had been considered "safe" by conservative parents shocked and frightened by events at Berkeley and some other major campuses in the state.

"We are the people our parents warned us against," said Yippie (Youth International) leader Jerry Rubin in what has become one of the most widely repeated slogans of the New Left.

It would be hard to over-emphasize the effect on young radicals of the Chicago trial. The defence contention that the trial was a "legal lynching" finds tremendous support among the young radicals. Many say the trial outcome—contempt sentences for all, riot convictions against some—caused a major turn toward activism by those who felt the courts could be counted upon to shield them from any repression.

Those not ready to take up bombs, and few are, increasingly voice support for direct attacks on the symbols of the society they have abandoned in hatred.

"We are seeing this now in New York where they bombed the three corporate offices," a West Coast radical said. "We also saw it in Santa Barbara where the kids actually fought with police and chased them out of the area before the bank was burned down."

There appears to be rapidly growing support for "the Santa Barbara solution." For a growing number of radicals, many past bombings and riotous demonstrations were the results of what some call "emotional politics," infantilism and, in effect, temper tantrums. The call now is for attacks on the pillars of the system.

Some radicals who disapprove of the bombing say they are planning mass marches on production plants they hope to occupy and thus force the corporation to begin manufacturing "what people really need at prices they can afford, not the junk being pushed off on us now," as one said.

And if the corporation refuses? "Shut it down, destroy it," an increasing number say, especially when they talk of expected new seizures of campus buildings.

Although many radicals concede their talk of revolution is based more on bravado than reality, even the moderates gloomily predict a wave of repressions even if the violence keeps on at the present level.

New Left leaders in New York, the Midwest and the West Coast talk constantly of the need to radicalize the workers to give them a broad enough base for real action and enough muscle. Attempted liaisons with workers so far have failed. Radicals voice dismay and confusion.

But if an overwhelming majority of radicals fear repression, some openly court it. Yippie leader Rubin says in his book, Do It! "Repression turns demonstrations-protests into wars . . . repression eliminates bystanders . . . it forces everyone to pick a side . . . a movement cannot grow without repression . . . the left needs an attack from the centre and the right . . . the street is the stage."

The intelligence chief of a Pacific Northwest city said, "We've got a social revolution on our hands. The revolution has begun definitely. And on how we handle it or how we steer the people in it will depend whether this country will exist very much longer."

Will anything reverse the growing, desperate alienation of a radical young? A year ago the end of the Vietnam war probably would have decimated their ranks overnight. This no longer is considered true. Some question their ability to keep support for ever-escalating violence if a liberal administration headed by someone with the youth appeal of a John F. Kennedy were elected in 1972. Most on the radical left consider this unlikely, probably all the more so because of their own actions in the next two years.

Other unlikely pressure-reducers include immediate legalizing action of marijuana or declaring amnesty for draft dodgers and anti-war deserters.

Some sociologists contend the way to understand the mind of the young is through its music. A few years ago the radicals cheered the pacifist messages of singers Joan Baez and Bob Dylan. Now one of the most wildly applauded groups is the Jefferson Airplane and their song, We Can be Together. It proclaims in part:

"We are all outlaws in the eyes of America.

"In order to survive we steal, fight, lie, forge, f . . ., hide and deal in drugs.

"We are obscene, lawless, hideous, dangerous, dirty, violent and young.

"All your property is the target for your enemy.

City Man Acquitted In Knifing

A jury of two women and eight men acquitted Shirb E. Gilbreath, 42, in Victoria county court Friday on charges of knifing two men in Paul's Drive-in restaurant and being in possession of a dangerous weapon.

Gilbreath formerly played for a professional football team in Victoria.

Gilbreath was charged with attacking John Charles Andrew, 84 Milgrove, and Peter Lindley, 478 Burnside Road East.

Defence counsel David R. Wilson argued that Gilbreath was provoked and that he acted only in self-defence.

RESTAURANT

Counsel said Gilbreath was provoked by a man in the restaurant who said: "Lout out, or the big black devil will get you," and "If the big black devil gives me any trouble, I'll stick a knife in his head."

Produced as exhibits in court were a jacket worn by Lindley, which was badly slashed, and a bloodstained shirt.

Wilson said two men came at the accused, one with a dinner knife and the other with a fork.

Had Gilbreath intended to wound either man, counsel said, it would have been easy to hurt them seriously. As it was, their injuries were superficial.

WITNESSES

Crown Counsel Cecil Branson produced witnesses who said Lindley suffered a number of knife wounds, including a six-inch cut on the forehead and cuts on the left index finger, left elbow, upper chest and lower stomach.

After a lengthy summing-up by Judge Montague Drake, the jury considered its verdict for 50 minutes before finding Gilbreath not guilty.

Stamp Booklet Gets New Style

A new style of stamp booklet will be released shortly, replacing that now issued by post office vending machines.

The new 25 cent booklet will contain four six-cent black definitive stamps and will be lightly sealed at the open end to protect the stamps.

The post office said the change comes primarily as a result of increasing costs to produce the booklets. There will be no recall of the present booklet containing four six-cent stamps and a one-cent stamp. When all existing supplies of this booklet have been sold, the new ones will be released.

Man Drove Despite Life Ban

Eric John Anderson, 30, of Port Alberni, under a life driving ban since 1962, pleaded guilty in provincial court Friday to driving while suspended and driving without insurance.

He was remanded to Monday for sentence.

It was disclosed by prosecutor Peter Birkett that the accused had been driving quite extensively since he was convicted on Dec. 5, 1962, in Dawson City, Yukon, of criminal negligence causing death.

He was then prohibited from driving anywhere in Canada for life.

But Birkett said traffic convictions against Anderson showed that he had driven.

He said he was fined $350 and given a six-month driving ban after a Saanich impaired driving conviction on Feb. 13, 1967. He had committed other driving offences in Victoria and Port Alberni.

Judge William Ostler said the other courts could not have known that Anderson had been prohibited from driving for life.

DOMED CITIES SEEN FOR YEAR 2000

BANFF, Alta. (CP) — There will be 40,000,000 Canadians in the year 2000 and most of them will live in giant mega-cities, domed to provide environmental control and to prevent pollution.

Kenneth R. Lavery, a member of a Toronto management consulting firm, made the prediction Thursday at an educational conference for accountants.

He said life styles in the year 2000 will be as different from today as today is from 100 years ago and the outcome may depend on whether Canadians back into the future or do the research and planning necessary to help shape events.

Eighty-five per cent of Canada's population would be concentrated in five mega-cities—Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Halifax and Vancouver.

Apartments Saved Oak Bay One Mill Jump

New apartments in Oak Bay have saved property owners a tax increase of one mill, Mayor Frances Elford said Friday.

Tax revenue from new apartments will add over $50,000 to municipal coffers this year.

"The value of one mill for 1970 is $50,860," said Elford, "so this means the apartments are equivalent to just over one mill that would otherwise have to be spread out over all the property owners."

TAX ROLLS

She compared probable contributions of three apartment developments now on the tax rolls with contributions from single family dwellings they have replaced.

Mitchell Oaks Apartment at 2065 Oak Bay will be taxed about $8,858 while a house on the same spot would pay $740.

Woodridge Manor, 2230 Cadboro Bay, will pay about $10,200 compared with $800 for a house.

Village Manor Apartments will bring in about $10,300 this year while a house would pay $1,670.

Elford said increased revenue from apartments will more than justify cost to the municipality of installing increased services.

Future council policy will be to force developers to pay a larger share of costs for work such as providing drainage for their property, she said.

So far, developers have had to pay for items like fire hydrants and special lights, and some have had to pay part of the cost of drainage.

'HYDRO MUST DOUBLE IN SEVEN YEARS'

PENTICTON (CP) — B.C. Hydro will have to spend $1,360,000,000 over the next seven years to keep up with the demand for electrical power in the province, Hydro co-chairman Dr. Gordon Shrum said here Friday.

Hydro will have to build as many power outlets in the next seven years as have already been built in the province up to this time, Shrum told the 160 delegates to the 18th annual meeting of the Electrical Contractors Association of B.C.

"The load growth over the last decade was been 10.5 per cent every year. In order to keep up with the demand, B.C. Hydro facilities must double within the next seven years, Shrum said.

Timber Industry Told Look to B.C. Markets

VANCOUVER (CP) — Resources Minister Ray Williston Friday told the British Columbia timber industry to look after its provincial markets before plunging into world commerce.

Mr. Williston told the annual meeting of the B.C. Council of Forest Industries that last year, when world prices were high, the industry in many instances failed to take care of domestic requirements.

This, he said, was "absolutely wrong," and "when the world market is tough, don't come back here and ask them to pick it up unless you're willing to look after your own provincial market."

The provincial resources minister cited instances of B.C. companies shipping component parts to the U.S. for such things as school buildings, while school boards here had to buy the same products from firms across the line in Washington state.

Mr. Williston also levelled harsh criticism at the federal government for its failure to adequately promote B.C. timber products through its trade offices and high commissioners around the world.

Buffalo to Fly Over City Hall

Manitoba's provincial flag, The Buffalo, will be flown from the Victoria city hall tower for a day next month.

Mayor Courtney Haddock said Friday he has agreed to fly the flag on Manitoba Day, May 12, if Winnipeg will do the same for Victoria in 1971.

Haddock is a former Winnipegger.

Housing Expert Predicts Boom

VANCOUVER (CP) — The American government's top expert on housing told the British Columbia Forest Industry Friday to get set for a homebuilding boom in the U.S. three years from now.

The advice came from Eugene A. Gulledge, commissioner of the U.S. Federal Housing Administration and Assistant Secretary for Housing Production and Mortgage Credit in the Department of Housing and Urban Affairs. Gulledge reports to urban affairs secretary George Romney.

The commissioner told the B.C. Council of Forest Industries that Congress has approved construction of 26,000,000 housing units in the next 10 years, which averages out to 2,600,000 annually.

In 1969, about 1,440,000 units were built and the same number should be finished this year, said Gulledge. In 1971 the objective is 1,700,000 units and in 1972, about 2,000,000 units.

"We hope to reach our annual goal by 1974 and get up to about 3,000,000 units a year in the latter part of the 1970s," he told about 500 timber executives at the CFI's annual meeting.

Gulledge said even though the housing industry now is running 1,000,000 units a year behind the objective set by Congress, he is confident the projections will be fulfilled by the time the 10 years is up.

He said this is the first time that Romney's department has tackled the housing problem on a correlated basis with the U.S. Departments of Commerce and Labor, and the first time Congress has fully recognized its financial responsibilities in housing.

"I don't make promises I can't keep, but I can say with confidence we're going to reach those housing goals," said the FHA commissioner. "We now have the commitment and the organization to do it."

MAN IS THE PREY

The Hyena Giggles Over His Kill

By JAMES CLARKE

Over a period of eight years from 1903, the tigress of Champawat, near the Nepal border, killed and ate 436 human beings. This is the record tally authenticated against any single member of the cat family. Her toll was so enormous for such a relatively short time, and her kills so regular, that it appears she lived almost, if not entirely, on human flesh.

This would be exceptional. Unlike the lion, which can become addicted to human flesh and eat nothing else, when a tiger turns man-eater it tends to treat man as a delicacy. It will continue to take cattle and deer as opportunity offers.

It has been calculated that a tiger needs 3½ tons of meat a year. On an exclusively human diet, that would represent nearly sixty people. A lion needing 2½ tons of meat a year, however, would need far more than forty human beings if that was all it ate, because a lion tends to leave the head, limb extremities and larger bones. The tiger frequently eats everything — blood-soaked clothing included.

Last of a Series

During the course of this century tigers have hunted almost the length and breadth of Asia, from the Caspian to the Sea of Japan, from southeast Asia to the frozen wastes of Siberia.

Today the tiger is retreating. Apart from a few score surviving in Iran and perhaps a hundred strictly protected in the Soviet Union, they have been shot out over five million square miles of western, central and eastern Asia.

Only 17,000, it is estimated, survive in the world: fewer than 4,000 in India, perhaps 12,000 or more throughout Nepal, Bhutan, Indo-China, Burma, Thailand, Malaya and Sumatra.

At a conservative estimate, tigers must have eaten well over half a million people in India during the past four centuries; over the whole of Asia not less than a million. Today the figure for India is about 600-800 a year.

It is difficult to say whether the lion of Africa eats more. I doubt it, though there must be twenty or more lions in Africa to every tiger in India. Central Africa probably suffers from lions more than any other area, though other areas are affected from time to time.

What makes one area more attractive to man-eaters than another? A hundred years ago Dr. Livingstone noted some such areas, and these areas are still notorious. I suspect the Arab slave trade two centuries earlier.

For three hundred years Arab slave traders left hundreds of thousands of unwanted captives to die around their sacked villages and beside the well-beaten trails. Practically all were cleaned up by lions, leopards and hyenas, and man-eating became a habit.

Central Africa is hardly ever without such horrors as man-eating lions, leopards and crocodiles. And hyenas.

Throughout Africa there are scores, if not hundreds, who have had their faces mutilated or limbs severed by the spotted hyena (Crocuta crocuta).

One victim's face now ended below his cheekbones: nose, palate, upper teeth, tongue and almost the entire lower jaw were gone. Only his eyes and the upper part of his head remained intact. Yet he was moderately healthy and had taught himself to swallow food.

The hyena had come during the night, as they always do, smelling food. Deep in the village, it had stopped by a hut where the smell was strongest. Silently it moved in, until its nose was an inch from the man's face. The appalling smell woke the man, but as he opened his eyes the terrible jaws—capable of carrying a 40-pound carcass — snapped just once, as effortlessly as a man biting a biscuit.

Few animals are quite so repulsive as the spotfed hyena. One has only to hear them over a carcass, sniggering, giggling, moaning, shrieking and screaming with "laughter" to appreciate the horror they arouse.

And more than horror. Some Africans sincerely believe that there are no wild hyenas, that they all belong to witch-doctors; and they refuse to give information about them. Witch-doctors often keep hyenas as pets, some even, by methods which make one blanch, training them to eat men and hiring them out to settle scores.

In parts of Africa the hyena is a more consistent man-eater than the leopard, and in parts a greater man-killer than lion and leopard together.

The strength of the leopard, too, is astonishing. A 150-pound leopard has been seen to carry a 90-pound antelope 30 feet up a tree (out of reach of hyenas). Another carried a 200-pound baby giraffe 12 feet up a tree. What is strange is that so swift, so fierce (when wounded) and so well-equipped a beast should find it as difficult as it apparently does to overpower a man.

In 1964 two Johannesburg newspapers investigated 32 attacks by leopards in four years (others undoubtedly went unreported in remote districts). Not one of the 32 was fatal to the people concerned; ten leopards escaped; ten were shot; seven were speared, clubbed or axed to death — and five were killed barehanded.

In four attacks the victims were able to punch the leopard on the nose, each time driving it away. There are scores of records of men strangling leopards, and a Texan white hunter called Cottar is said to have killed two by knocking their heads together.

These leopards were all provoked — wounded or attacked by dogs. The confirmed man-eater is a different kettle of fish.

In India, a generation ago, the Panar leopard is said to have eaten 400 people before it was shot, and the Rudraprayag leopard 125. In 1959-60 the man-eaters of Bihar state are said to have eaten 300. Unlike the wounded mauler, the true man-eater shows no ill-temper but hunts with an awesome calm and cunning, often in both India and Africa specializing in child victims.

Of all the large cats, the cheetah is probably the most amiable — although physically capable of killing a man. My experience of them is that they are extremely affectionate and, unlike their cousin the leopard, not given to bursts of temperament.

A friend of mine used to amuse himself and his pet cheetah by running past it, knowing that the cheetah would be unable to resist giving chase. The cheetah would lope up alongside — as it would a hunted buck — and trip him.

With Warmth and Wit He Charmed a Festival

By AUDREY JOHNSON

ADJUDICATOR Murray Adaskin talks with prodigies who "floored" him—10-year-old Gwen Hoebig and her brother, Desmond, aged eight.

Whoever it was who paraphrased Shakespeare with "one touch of humor makes the whole world kin," was as close to the truth as Shakespeare himself.

Even love needs a sense of humor.

And festival nerves, competition and criticism can be sweetened by it.

Murray Adaskin is the living proof if any is needed. His is going to be a tough act to follow — as the show business saying goes — for adjudicators presiding over next week's Victoria Music Festival's sessions.

Lovingly Warm

String students this week found him as lovingly warm as the spring sunshine, freshened by a benign sort of champagne humor.

The Adaskin personality refuting the tarnished theory that a disciplined childhood and youth is likely to create a warped or inhibited adult.

The Adaskins were a totally musical family — Murray's brother Harry, for example, also a violinist, is professor of music in University of B.C.'s music division and has had a distinguished career as lecturer and radio commentator and was an original member of the famed Hart House String Quartet.

Their father was a musician too. "He was the boss in our family," says Murray.

But he doesn't say it with the sort of bitter twist that is popularly supposed to go with that phrase. He says it in a mood of comfortable recollection.

Shortest Time

"Father came of a generation that believed instilling spiritual values in children was more important than encouraging them to make the most amount of money in the shortest possible time."

As a consequence Adaskin is convinced that musicians — and other artists — live a privileged life in which mere affluence is a minor consideration.

He has a few other convictions too that go contrary to some expert opinion. Take the question of a B.C. symphony orchestra.

The idea has been expressed in certain quarters that it would be sensible to make out of the Victoria and Vancouver symphonies one British Columbia orchestra that would serve the whole province.

"Nonsense!" retorts Adaskin. "It doesn't work. I know because I've seen what happens.

"Take the Atlantic Symphony Orchestra. That was supposed to be created out of the Halifax and Saint John Symphonies. And what is the result?

"Not one Saint John member plays in the Atlantic Symphony. Saint John has lost its orchestra and what has happened to all the best Saint John players? Goodness knows.

Sell Homes

"If it happened here, unless Victoria musicians were willing to sell their homes, pull up roots and move to the mainland, they'd probably be eliminated too. And the city would be lucky if it got a symphony concert once in three or four months. It costs a lot of money to move a big organization like a symphony around."

His response to the argument that the Victoria Symphony is never likely to achieve first rank professional status was fiery.

"So what?" he exclaimed." "Every orchestra can't be a Berlin Philharmonic. But that doesn't mean only the Berlin Philharmonics should stay alive.

"An orchestra like Victoria's provides important spiritual levels in the community. Its existance is vital to your excellent string students."

And if that isn't talk straight from the horse's mouth — if Murray Adaskin will forgive my putting it so — what is?

As a former member of Canada Council, Adaskin was outspoken concerning his opinion that the CC should relax its maximum support of the five major orchestras for a while and give firmer support to building some of the others.

Contradiction

In this his stand is in open contradiction of the controversial opinion of Sir Bernard Heinz, the Australian expert Canada Council brought in a few years ago to survey the situation with regard to Canadian orchestras.

Concerning festivals, Adaskin says he likes the non-competitive classes the Victoria festival has added this year. He admits that he has never liked competitiveness in the arts. He especially dislikes competitions for composers.

How does one alot first, second and third prizes to composers, he asks.

"How should we expect to understand the great utterances of distinguished people at first hearing? If I were living in Vienna in the time of Beethoven and Schubert, how could I assess the relative merits of their works in a competition?"

He likes the fact that almost all awards in the Victoria Festival are in the form of bursaries "because there are never enough bursaries for talented students."

Concerning the Victoria Conservatory of Music, he commented: "This is a tremendous advantage for the city. What it would mean for us in Saskatoon to have such a thing and what a tremendous help it would be to the University. (University of Saskatchewan where Adaskin is head of the music department).

"I hope it is being well supported."

Adaskin likes Victoria so well — its musical climate at the present time as well as its natural one — that he looks eagerly forward to coming back.

Possibly next year to the festival. Very likely to make his permanent home when he retires in a few years time.

Topless Sign

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The city of San Francisco has filed a suit to force the removal of a huge sign of a topless dancer with two strategically-placed flashing red lights.

Deputy city attorney Edward Rothman said he wasn't concerned with the nature of the sign over a North Beach club. He said the action was taken because the shapely lady extended higher than the permitted 10 feet above the roof of the building.

Busy Week Ahead for Festival

Half-way mark has been reached in the 1970 Victoria Music Festival and the weekend provides a breathing spell for busy committee members and hall and office staffs.

It will be a welcome respite for the most hectic period of the festival erupts Monday shortly after 8:30 a.m.

At that hour an office force headed by festival secretary Ada English and an army of adjudicators' secretaries, platform stewards and ticket sellers prepare to open sessions at four separate centres.

At 9 a.m. promptly, four adjudicators' bells will ring and Number 1 will go up on the board calling out the first performers for junior vocal, piano sight reading, speech arts and school band.

Centres are, respectively, First United Fellowship Hall, St. John's Memorial Hall, St. Ann's Academy and Blanshard School.

Pipe organ classes will be heard in the afternoon at St. John's Church but otherwise the schedule remains the same throughout Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday when brass, woodwind and band classes end.

Afternoon sessions begin at 1:30 p.m. and evening at 7:30.

Special sessions include the Beethoven classes on Thursday evening, a program that ends with the two major contests — for the Rose Bowl and Victoria Medallion.

There is a speech arts honor program on Friday evening at Blanshard School and the crowning event, the Festival Highlights concert at McPherson Playhouse, Saturday night.

A piano workshop scheduled in the official program for Friday has been cancelled owing to pressure of classes.

Adjudicators arriving this weekend are Dr. William Revelli, for brass and woodwind solo and bands; Sidney Harrison, piano, Rankin Bushby, vocal, and Mrs. Leona Paterson, speech arts.

History Written With Passion and Partisanship

By GEORGE WOODCOCK

I wonder if history can ever be interesting and at the same time dispassionate. Objectivity has become the ideal of historians as their art has attempted to take on the form of a social science.

But the very fact that history deals so largely with human beings performing actions and enduring predicaments that arouse reactions varying from admiration and envy to disgust and pity, makes it difficult to avoid passion and partisanship.

In fact, all the great historians, from Thucydides down to Gibbon and from Parkman to Toynbee have been men who have felt warmly and written with bias about the ages they have chosen. They have used prejudice, but to illuminate rather than obscure, and if they have been unfair in the process, the wise reader forgives it and reads the opposing view to correct his perspective.

CANADA'S FIRST CENTURY, by Donald Creighton. Macmillan. $9.95.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD
. . . his only hero

I do not think Donald Creighton will rank among those classic historians of the past, largely lecause he tries so hard to assume their style with the weakening that imitation brings. What was eloquent in the setting of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries seems merely rhetorical in the twentieth, and I always find difficulty getting past Creighton's manner to hear what he really has to say.

Canada's First Century is not one of the books by which Creighton will be remembered as a great illuminator of the Canadian past; it lacks either the original conception that inspired The Empire of the St. Lawrence or the concentrated involvement in a single admired hero that gave power and depth to his two biographical volumes on Sir John A. Macdonald. But it is a great deal more than a mere survey of the history of Canada in the first hundred years since Confederation.

Not that Creighton reveals many new facts. Indeed, he makes no claim that Canada's First Century is a work of original research, and almost everything he has to tell can be found piecemeal elsewhere.

What matters is the putting together, and here Creighton does present a narrative that runs with a grand sweep, rather like the St. Lawrence he has given so much importance in his interpretation of Canadian history.

Yet one has to qualify the achievement in terms of Creighton's bias. This is not the best history of Canada since Confederation, but it is the best such history from the conservative viewpoint.

Creighton writes not merely with passion, but also with partisanship in the literal sense, and it is amazing how consistently he reaches the conclusion that while the Conservatives, even at their most stupid, were inspired by high and consistent ideals, the Liberals, even at their most intelligent, were cynical and devious politicians who lacked the national vision, and consistently betrayed Canada in the interests of continentalism. His villains are predictable: Laurier, King, Pearson.

CREIGHTON

His hero is solitary: Sir John A. Macdonald, beside whom Creighton finds even other Conservatives lesser men.

Linked to this bias is, perhaps naturally, a sense of America as the abiding threat to Canada's freedom, and an interpretation of the intentions of the Fathers of Confederation with which many historians will not agree: That the men who gathered at Quebec in 1864 meant to create a strong national government such as Canada has in fact never attained.

More distasteful I find his harsh attitude toward Louis Riel and his refusal to consider the legality, the humanity or the political wisdom of his hanging.

And, though opposition to the recent demands of the French-Canadians has its place, I find Creighton's view of their claims rigid to the point of blindness.

But he has at least the honesty to speak what many believe but have not the courage to say at a time when criticism of Quebec has come to be regarded as sheer bigotry.

And so he presents not merely passionate history, but also a clearly defined point of view which one can respect without necessarily accepting it.

'A True Leader, Not a Politician' Chavez Represents New Generation

By BOB MITCHELL

"Why is it that American journalists do not respect the Panthers as politically sophisticated men?" Jean Genet asked recently in Los Angeles. He might have included the name of Cesar Chavez in his question, for while Chavez is not black but Mexican-American he is one of those great leaders whose efforts until fairly recently were ignored by the news media.

Sal Si Puedes is the name of a Mexican slum in San Jose, Calif. It means "escape if you can" and it was there Chavez in 1952 started to organize southern California's migrant farm laborers as a member of Saul Alinsky's Community Services Organization.

SAL SI PUEDES: Cesar Chavez and the New American Revolution by Peter Matthiessen. Random House. $8.50.

When Peter Matthiessen met Chavez at Delano in 1968 the strike against California table grapes was into its third year, and with time on their side it appeared the strikers would ultimately bring the growers to their knees.

In chronicling the patient achievements of the head of the United Farm Workers Matthiessen has been careful to steer the reader away from the temptation to see popular leaders in the inhuman light of an imagined "charisma".

He was with Chavez long enough to get to know some his delightfully human traits. He is a great leader, and you can identify with him more than with the plastic mediocrity of men who come out of party politics.

"Chavez is the only leader in the nation who has gained the fierce allegiance of the New Left without appeasing it. The students and black militants are not drawn to Chavez the Revolutionary or Iconoclast or Political Innovator or Radical Intellectual — he is none of these. In an ever more polluted and dehumanized world, they are drawn to him, apparently, because he is a true leader, not a politician . . ."

He arrives at a bargaining session tie-less, wearing a work shirt with an anti-Reagan button ("This State Is Temporarily Out Of Order"), and drinking Diet-Rite. He gave up drinking and smoking early in the strike, regularly attends Mass and gets angry if union members stand up when he walks into a meeting.

He arrived in Delano in 1962 with eight kids in a smoking old '53 Merc station wagon. He chose the Delano area as the base for the union because with its 70-odd grape ranches, crops nine months of the year, it has a less transient labor force, and therefore one that is easier to organize. He walked from door to door and into the fields to distribute 80,000 cards asking workers what they thought they should be earning.

There are many issues in the farm labor struggle: wages, pesticides, working conditions, child labor, racism. With the same efficient unconcern as they have used to pollute the land, growers continue to exploit America's huge migrant population of Mexicans, blacks, Filipinos, Indians and whites.

The union Chavez and his hardcore of believers have forged over the last eight years stands as the most successful attempt yet to organize the farm workers.

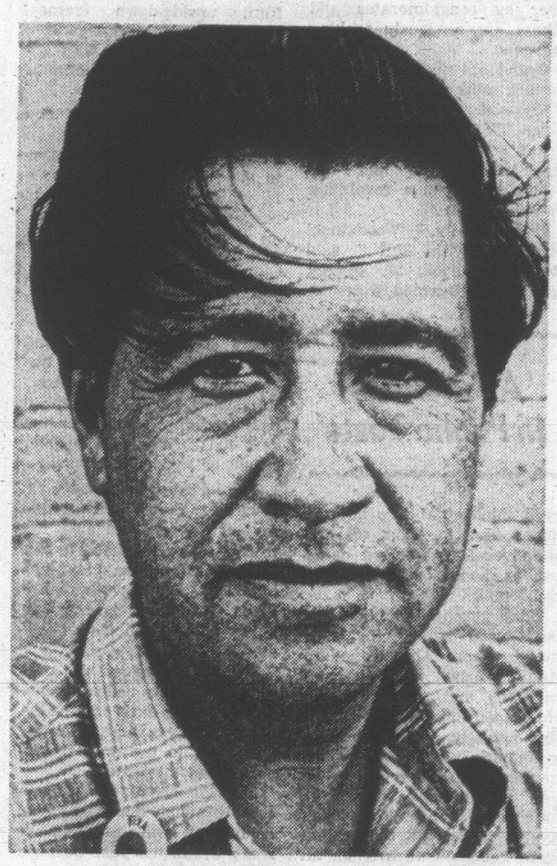
Chavez has been careful not to affiliate the farm labor movement with other causes. He has resisted invitations to endorse the anti-Vietnam war movement, but sometimes refers to his own union as the Vietcong.

The growers — a well-meaning but irrationally right-wing group — have from the start charged Chavez has very little support from the workers up until the day they sign a contract with the union. They also say Chavez is a tool of the communists, but in southern California the label is as much a recommendation as a stigma.

Peter Matthiessen is a long-haired naturalist-explorer and novelist, the same age as Chavez (44). He makes it clear he is on the side of the strikers, but has gone out of his way to record the viewpoint of the growers, some of whom have been hard hit by the strike and boycott.

He has written a long book about Chavez and the farm labor movement, one that is packed with historical and sociological detail and which could serve as a handbook for students of organizing tactics.

It's not a dry book, but full of colorful comment about the brooding conflict between a rich and powerful minority and a people forcing them to share their wealth, all this on a background of urban and rural decay.



CESAR CHAVEZ

The Paradox That Is Russia

By NORMAN CRIBBENS

In 1967 the Soviet Union celebrated the 50th anniversary of a revolution that was to liberate the worker from his chains and lead humanity out of the oppressive shadows of capitalism into broad sunlit uplands of peace, prosperity and progress.

Less than a year later, with its cohorts from the Warsaw Pact, the Soviet Union was beating down the attempt of a small neighboring country to combine socialism with personal freedom.

Between the aspirations commemorated in 1967 and the fierce reality imposed on Czechoslovakia in 1968 there seems at first to be no common aim.

Erik de Mauny, a BBC correspondent who spent three years in Moscow from 1963 to 1966, attempts to explain the paradox.

As he says, there are many ways of interpreting what Russians call the Great October Revolution; and from almost each one, like a shadow image, an exact opposite interpretation can just as easily be invoked.

As an example, de Mauny was told by a high Soviet official that, in the second half of the century, the Soviet Union need no longer shroud itself in secrecy.

"We have such vast achievements to our credit, we are now happy to display them to the outside world," the official said.

In fulfilment of these words, the BBC correspondent was taken wherever he asked to go and saw many things that were formerly on the secret list.

RUSSIAN PROSPECT by Erik de Mauny. Macmillan. $8.95.

"I was not aware of being regularly followed by members of the Soviet militia or the secret police," he writes, "but I soon discovered that my letters were often opened and my telephone calls tapped, possibly not around the clock, but certainly on the basis of frequent spot checks.

De Mauny's thorough knowledge of the language — he took a degree in Russian at the London School of Slavonic studies — and his obvious sympathy with the Russian people places him in an enviable position from which to assess Soviet life and thought today.

His book offers an illuminating and many-sided commentary on the Soviet Union. He concludes:

"Peaceful co-existence may be a practical reality, even if its basis is no more than an uneasy consensus between East and West to avoid mutual annihilation.

"But this in no way involves ideological co-existence, nor does such a development seem remotely likely for the foreseeable future.

"In the communist view, there can indeed be no ideological co-existence so long as capitalism continues to exist: and the boot naturally fits as neatly on the other foot."

John O'Hara: Getting It All Down on Paper

By MARTIN WEIL

John O'Hara's sparely written, meticulously detailed stories and novels of America in this first half of this century are both literature and social history.

Rising to fame with publication of Appointment in Samarra in 1934, O'Hara turned out 14 novels, between 300 and 400 short stories and five published plays before his death last week at 65.

Marked by an uncanny realism and sensitivity to dialogue, much of his work was set in a fictional Pennsylvania town called Gibbsville, which many readers saw as Pottsville, Pa., where O'Hara was born and raised.

The last 15 years were an especially productive period. Some time ago O'Hara told an interviewer why he was working and what he was trying to do.

"I want to get it all down on paper while I can," he said.

"The United States in this century is what I know and it is my business to write about it to the best of my ability, with the sometime special knowledge I have.

"The '20s, the '30s and the '40s are already history but I cannot be content to leave their story in the hands of the historians and the editors and the picture books.

"I want to record the way people talked and thought and felt, and to do it with complete honesty and variety."

For O'Hara, getting it all down meant in part painstakingly accurate descriptions of a range of men and women that included movie stars, servants and steelworkers, bankers, bums and political bosses.

It meant introducing in lean, astringent prose their preferences in autos, whisky, sex, literature, politics, religion and every aspect of life.

It meant telling the secrets involved in sleeping for two days straight; in building up a hardware business; in negotiating a movie contract.

He was known for a direct, declarative style that shunned simile and metaphor, and relied heavily on dialogue.

Each character's comments, cadences and accents appeared so clearly characteristic that O'Hara often was able to write long series of exchanges without ever identifying the person speaking.

Although characters from all walks of life are found in O'Hara's work, none of them scanted in protrayal, it is for his depiction of a pre-jet set world of power, position and security that he is generally known.

He knew their clubs and social codes. He knew where they bought their clothes, what they thought about money and how they spoke to their servants.

O'Hara's work made money. Many of his books have appeared on best seller lists. Bidding for film rights to his novels is said to begin at $500,000. Reportedly, he long ago became a millionaire.

With the critics, his success was not complete.

He won praise for his clean, sure style, his intense focus on individuals, his mastery of speech detail and social history.

Even while praising his skill, however, some charged him with superficiality and an obsession with sex.

Asked once to assess his own work, he said this:

"Better than anyone else, he told the truth about his time, the first half of the 20th century. He was a professional. He wrote honestly and well."

Upbeat Shirley Temple, Downhill With Mahatma

By MARK WIEGERS

Ring Lardner, Westbrook Pegler, George Bernard Shaw, Edith Wharton and H. L. Mencken wrote for it. So did Greta Garbo, FDR, Winston Churchill and Cornelius Vanderbilt Jr.

With bylines like that, Liberty magazine should have had universal appeal. At least that's what Col. Robert McCormick of the Chicago Tribune and Capt. Joseph Medill Patterson of the New York Daily News thought when they founded it in 1924.

The Daily News, the first U.S. tabloid, had been an instant success, and McCormick and his cousin Patterson reasoned that a magazine patterned along the same lively lines, but slightly higher class, would do well too.

Just to be sure, they added large doses of kiddies' cute sayings, all kinds of quizzes and contests galore.

One contest, on the question of capital punishment, was won by a murderer's daughter. "If there had been capital punishment in the states of Rhode Island, he would not have committed this crime as he loves his own life dearly," she wrote.

Despite the gimmicks and a two to three million circulation, Liberty, "the magazine for everybody," never attracted the advertisers and showed a profit only three years of its 26-year life.

Even physical cultist Bernarr McFadden who traded the Detroit daily to McCormick and Patterson for Liberty, couldn't infuse it with health. Liberty died with a cough and a contest in July, 1950.

THE LIBERTY YEARS, 1924-1950. Prentice-Hall. $18.95.

Now Allen Churchill has culled Liberty articles into an anthology which pop cult fiends ought to find as delightful as a banana split.

Liberty was hot on Hollywood and crime. Adela Rogers St. John does a smashing portrait of the It Girl, Clara Bow, describing her as a constantly quivering nerve end — "the tension is too great for every-day living."

Scarface Al Capone ("executive ability beyond the ordinary") the great Dillinger ("that poisonous little rat") and Bonnie and Clyde all get their moralistic due in Liberty's pages.

The fiction, by Vina Delmar, Elliott White Springs, Margery Sharp and Eleanor Roosevelt (a short story called "Christmas, 1940"), among others, is slick and saccharine, except for Budd Shulberg's "What Makes Sammy Run?", a title that became a cliche.

Amidst the sentiment and slang, there are gourmet pickings for the devotee of the 20s and 30s as flappers do their stuff and lovers ask, "didn't you like my torch song?"

Even when Liberty turned political or serious, it kept its jazzy movie magazine tone.

The people who write those teasing headlines on the covers of modern movie magazines ("Modern Screen Reveals Jackie Kennedy's True Love" and whatnot) must have got their start on Liberty.

Thus, Liberty's intriguing essay titled, "My Sex Life" by Mahatma Gandhi, begins, "In 1906 I took the vow of celibacy . . ." and goes downhill from there.

In "My Private Life," George Bernard Shaw tells us only that he intends to keep it private.

One coup for Liberty was its close relationship with the Roosevelt family. McFadden wrote fulsome editorials in praise of the Roosevelts ("hurrah for the New Deal," one began), and the Roosevelts wrote for Liberty as if it was their own unofficial house organ.

Excerpts of Roosevelt's speeches appeared regularly and in 1931, Liberty attempted to settle the question of FDR's health, sending Earle Looker and a team of specialists to issue a health report.

Mrs. Roosevelt and McFadden collaborated on a magazine called "Babies, Just Babies," and she had agonized over giving up the editorship of the publication after she became first lady.

McFadden finally turned on the Roosevelts ("Why I have been forced to abandon the New Deal," an editorial explained), but they kept writing for it.

One marvellous boo-boo came when Liberty assured its readers that Wallis Warfield Simpson was just one of the Prince of Wales' many American friends and their friendship was not to be taken too seriously.

"Why the Prince of Wales will never marry," Liberty cried.

After he did, Liberty asked Upton Sinclair, John Erskine and Cornelius Vanderbilt, along with editor Fulton Oursler, to advise the new Duke of Windsor what to do with the rest of his life. Somehow he ignored these suggestions, too.

The war years were good to Liberty, because it was one of the few magazines to have a constant supply of paper. After the war, her rivals — again well supplied — siphoned off the advertisers and Liberty sank to a dime biweekly before sinking out of sight.

Along with it went an era of high living, hard times and a devastating war, and yet an era of such innocence that in the midst of the depression, Liberty could close out a year-end issue headlining an article entitled, "Shirley Temple's New Year's Resolutions."

'WOODSTOCK'

Mind-Blowing Film To Shake Hollywood

Some of the Woodstock 400,000

By MICHAEL KERNAN

LOS ANGELES — In the very corridors of a hard-pressed major Hollywood studio, a bunch of independent New York film makers last month finished work on a marriage of cinema art and science that promises to revolutionize the movie industry.

"Woodstock," a film of the three-day rock festival in upstate New York last August which drew 400,000 people, is what is happening to the American movie industry, and the techniques, policies and attitudes it exemplifies could well be the dash of reality that will jolt Hollywood out of its $200 million nightmare.

Part of what makes "Woodstock" revolutionary is that it frees the screen image from the tyranny of the rectangle. In one rock number, the pictures goes black except for a narrow slit that shows two hands clapping rhythmically; as the music builds, the image grows across the screen; then it is two images; then three, side by side: mirrored views of the same performer, a closeup of fingers on a guitar, of a contorted mouth, of a face in the audience.

Skull-Busting Musical Climax

The shape on the screen now is a 12-sided cross. Quiet. The screen goes black. An instant later, the final note: a shouting face 30 feet wide. From speakers around the theatre rises a gigantic cheer enveloping the viewer.

Later a singer yells from the stage, "Give me an F," and 400,000 people yell back, "F," and in the roar of laughter the viewer finds that he has become one of them. At the roughcut screening in Los Angeles a theatreful of cigar-smoking executives so forgot themselves that they raised their hands in the V sign and sang along with the bouncing ball when the occasion demanded.

The film's creators describe it as a fun documentary, but it is far more than that. It brushes aside convention in its rage to expand the viewer's perceptions. It blends sight and sound to reproduce not only the complexity of rock but the bewildering multiplicity of the Woodstock experience itself.

"Woodstock" runs three hours and 15 minutes. There were 15 cameramen, a crew of 80, who shot 120 hours of film—60 miles of celluloid — and taped eight sound tracks on first-rate studio recording equipment.

Audience Joins The Sing-Along

It was wholly created by one of a growing number of free wheeling independents, Wadleigh-Maurice Productions Ltd., for $600,000. One of the establishment giants, Warner Bros., which provided the financing and is handling distribution and promotion, stands to make an eye-popping profit.

ZANUCK
. . . end of an era?

The movie is, in a word (used with some pride by a white-haired production executive) mind-blowing — and a mind-blowing idea is exactly what Hollywood needs today.

Last year the great studios all but closed their doors after a series of disasters: incredibly expensive plaster epics that bombed, box office magnets who lost their pull, $20,000,000 pictures that gathered dust for as long as a year because of contractual problems, and a sickening drop in attendance that saw the weekly average sink from 80,000,000 to 15,000,000 in two decades.

Hollywood took too long to learn to relate to the new generation, the under 30s who dominate our population. Now, MGM and Paramount are auctioning off their vast properties, two companies have let themselves be taken over by conglomerates and others are anxiously seeking mergers.

Grand old mogul Darryl F. Zanuck observed that, after Hollywood got done talking about TV, unions, box office prices, tacky theatres and tight money, the fact was "there has been a revolution in public taste."

Technically, 'Woodstock' compares with '2001'," said Robert Maurice, 32, shaggy and heavily bearded, a gentle-eyed intellectual who as producer had to fight off the studio and the picture came out as honest as his group could make it.

'A Revolution In Public Taste'

"The multiple image has been used before (by film makers from Abel Gance to Andy Warhol, in TV commercials and even in some Hollywood productions), but it didn't really add much. Our systematic use of multi-awareness is the only way we can adequately express the incredible multiplicity of events there, the things that were going on all around, all the time, on the stage and out on the hill."

He and Michael Wadleigh, the 28-year-old, long-haired director ("the greatest hand-held cameraman in the world," says Maurice) and other members of the tight-knit group were describing their troubles with the Hollywood establishment. Mostly it was complaints about poor craftsmanship, scratched film, upside-down frames, inept lab work, and a general inability to keep up with the advanced technical demands of the film.

As a matter of fact, if any one point illustrates where Hollywood stands in relation to the film world of today, it is this "Woodstock" was made possibly by a machine, an electronic editing table called the Kem, which permits one man to edit and mix (adjust sound to images) a movie by himself.

The $17,000 Kem can scan three reels of film and two sound tracks simultaneously; it takes 16 or 35 mm film; it has variable speeds from zero to 120 frames a second; it can be mastered in a day.

The Kem is made in Germany. It has been around for eight years. In 1968 the first one was imported to this country (by Wadleigh-Maurice), and now there are about 40 of them here, in the hands of independents and TV studios.

The big Hollywood still uses the Moviola, a noisy descendant of the early frame-by-frame viewers that requires, according to the unions, several years to master.

Mervyn Leroy, veteran establishment executive, said Hollywood will run out of films within the year because "just nobody's making movies these days."

Apparently he was thinking of the studios, because in the outside world almost everybody is making movies. Some of them are self-financed, ranging from Kem owners to loners who develop their own film in the bathtub. Many are bankrolled or otherwise supported by Warner's and other studios in an attempt to get with the new generation.

There is, for example, American Zoetrope ("Life . . . Revolution") in San Francisco, a loose coalition of film makers, notably John ("Crazy Quilt," Funnyman") Korty and Francis ("You're a Big Boy Now," "The Rain People") Coppola plus George Lucas, whose remake of a student film will be distributed under the Aoetrope name this summer as "THX-1138.

It is a fantasy set in an Orwellian future, featuring Donald Pleasance. Footnote: Mundane San Francisco locations such as the Marin Civic Centre, a subway construction site, a date centre become frightening scenes in a mechanized future by the simple addition of uniformed, shaven-headed actors.

There is Korty's just-completed "Riverrun" and his projected "Have You Seen the Elephant?" a study of modern California's relation to its rugged past. Here, too, help has been given by Warner's where Coppola used to work ("Finian's Rainbow" and the script of "Patton") before he ran away to San Francisco.

The gap between the independent with his hand-held 16mm. Bolex and the national distribution-exhibition apparatus of the major studios is being narrowed, according to Korty and Warner's hot young production chief Barry Beckerman, by new inventions: Eclair's fist-size 16 mm. camera, and lenses and emulsions that will enable 16 mm. film to survive blowing up to theatre scale without graininess or loss of detail.

Korty was amused by the comment about the lack of films. His problem is too many film makers. In the past six months he has talked to at least 500.

"It's like rock musicians," he said. "They're all over the place. A kid comes in all dressed up like a film maker, the bellbottom pants and scarf and bolero hat, but then you find out he's never made a film. Maybe he worked on one, which doesn't help us really. I tell them: Make one film that's all yours, even three minutes. Something we can see, so we can judge what you can do."

As would be expected, their relationship is complicated, volatile and funny.

Item: When the Wadleigh-Maurice group was brought out from New York last August to do their mixing and editing at Warner's, they set up a ping poing table in the hallway. The two dozen young people rented three houses in Los Angeles and live commune-style, but they have been working 20 hours a day, seven days a week, shaking up the staid atmosphere (the guard at the gate actually salutes incoming cars) with their beads, beards, bra-less insouciance and general air of gaiety. They have brought the effervescent spirit of Woodstock into the mausoleum of Warner Bros.

Item: There is frontal nudity in "Woodstock," occurring now and then during the non-performance half of the footage, and if this gives the film an X rating it will mean that most of the festival participants won't be allowed to see themselves on the screen. Of such paradoxes are generation gaps made.

Not Market, But A State of Mind

The latter was launched with receptions and press parties costing six figures; Korty spent $2,000 for a single girl publicist and had some people to dinner. The critics were kind to his film but blasted "The Bible." "It drove the producers crazy," he said. "They couldn't figure it out." (Neither film made money, Korty's because he couldn't get a distributor. "The Bible" because the audience had outgrown it.)

Item: Maurice says the Hollywood mentality works like this: "Easy Rider" is a success. So, you hire some hippies and tell them to make another "Easy Rider." He is only partly right.

True, Hollywood is famous for this kind of thinking, but that doesn't explain "Monterey Pop," "Don't Look Back," "Midnight Cowboy," "The Graduate" and other shock troops in the campaign to reach the turned-on generation, a campaign in which "Woodstock" may achieve a stunning breakthrough.

Doubtless rival studios will soon be putting on their own rock festival and getting some kids to photograph it. But there can never be another "Woodstock."

Maurice has reached beyond the young. He says his greatest challenge was to make the film popular with the older generations, too.

This is a paradox, perhaps, but it is a time of paradoxes, and the more one thinks about "Woodstock" the more one keeps returning to that mental image of all those cigar-breathing, pink-necked executives sticking their hands up in the darkened theatre to make the peace sign.

'A Movie Within a Movie Within a Movie'

By JOHN C. MAHONEY

CHINCHEROS, Peru — The clouds which had hung about the 20,700-foot peak of Salcantay lifted briefly to expose the snow-covered point which Dennis Hopper calls "The Paramount Mountain."

The rolling hills, the valleys which lie between that daily spectacle and the ancient hillside Quechua village of Chincheros, look like the work of Walt Disney's multiplane background artists, in possession of an iridescent green unknown to Hollywood.

Hopper is in the Andes to direct "The Last Movie," which he and screenwriter Stewart Stern had filed in 1965, in the hope that it would be the first movie he would direct. But first had been "Easy Rider."

Universal has put up $850,000 for the project, twice the budget of "Easy Rider." Hopper has creative autonomy.

"The Last Movie" concerns a Hollywood movie company which invades virgin locations in Peru to make a violent western. They leave the natives their sets and a new ritual.

Constructing camera, mike booms, reflectors and sets of bamboo filigree, laced with fireworks, the Indians create a living movie whose unwitting star is Hopper, an actor-stuntman who remains behind.

He is forced to examine his life, his delusions and his dreams, the worth of his reality, in a movie within a movie within a movie that indicts his values.

Unscheduled native events, relationships which developed between the volatile mass of Hopper's actor pals, found their way to film.

"I believe that 98 per cent of all creation is accident and one per cent is intelligence and one per cent is logic," says Hopper.

Hopper is into the Indian portion of the film, but it is lunchtime and no one knows what the first scene will be. As they are each day, Poupee Bocar and Stella Garcia (Hopper's leading lady) are fully made-up and ready, should they be called.

It is the first important break for each and with the exception of Italian star Thomas Milian, who is staying in Chincheros to avoid the nightly partying in Cuzco, their demeanor is the most professional of the imported acting company.

Hopper's crew is the same he had with him for "Easy Rider." Headed by cinematographer Laszlo Kovacs, his gaffer Richmond Aguilar, sound mixer Leroy Robbins and script supervisor Joyce King, it is probably the best, tight location unit in the business and often seems self-operative.

A few on the crew are not so patient. One complains, "I'm not used to this, I like to know what I'm doing and be prepared. He goes down to the Inca ruins and drops mescaline or acid and waits for vibrations from the Inca spirits. He may luck out, but he doesn't know what he is doing."

A mass begins in the old colonial church above the town square, which has been transformed into a 19th-century western border town. Robbins records the native band, the singing.

After lunch, shooting begins, moving swiftly through a scene in which Hopper and Miss Garcia leave the movie set, as Daniel Ades, the native "director," takes over the false front church from the native priest, Milian.

It is Lenten Carnival Days, an event ordinarily celebrated by the townspeople in their square. Robbins picks up the sound of drum, flute and guitar. The band, stopping but a moment to empty a bottle of pisco, enters the square, followed by a procession of dancers.

Laughing, oblivious, they cut into the scene, grab Ades, initiate him with a dousing of water and a pelting of flour, whirling him in a widening circle. Kovacs pans his camera to record the scene.

The musicians, now stumbling drunk, are intent upon enjoying the holiday they have awaited throughout the year and being done with the occupation. A Liman bristling with theatrical authority abrades more than an American film-maker whose novelty has worn thin. They begin to curse in Quecha, the surviving language of the Inca empire.

I grab one of the Peruvian grips. "What is he saying?"

"In Quechuan, he says, 'junkie go home.' "

"What?"

"Junkie go home."

"Junkie go home?"

"You know. Like the estudiantes. Junkie go home."

I repeated the same routine with two other peruanas in the company. The pronunciation never varied. I'm sure, of course, that the word was and is "Yankee."

But is it wise to underestimate native intelligence?

Theatre Hires Outsiders

OTTAWA (CP) — A subscription series of six French-language productions will be offered in the theatre at the National Arts Centre next season, director-general Hamilton Southam announced Friday.

In addition, special Christmas productions for children in the theatre and salon, similar to those done for English audiences, are planned.

Beacause of the internal problems which caused the disbandment earlier this week of Theatre du Capricorne, the resident French-language company, centre directors have decided to abandon the idea of resident companies for the time being.

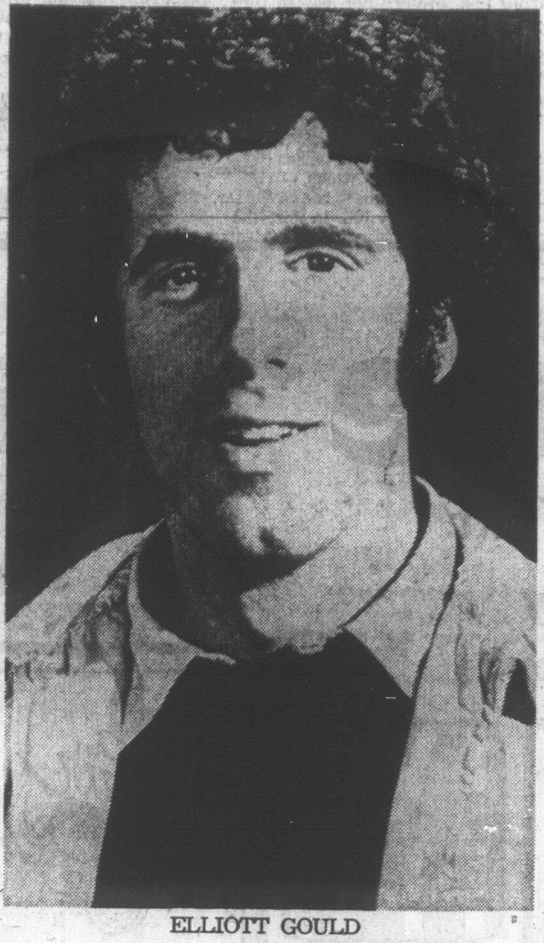
'Mr. Streisand' Flying on His Own Power Now

By MARTIN KASINDORF



ELLIOTT GOULD
. . . sexy homeliness

Elliott Gould had this special problem. People kept introducing him as "Mr. Streisand."

But of course that was five years ago when Gould's wife, Barbra, was skyrocketing into the show-biz stratosphere singing songs about people needing people while her husband was the loneliest man in the world.

Today, after a separation, a course with Lee Strasberg and several years of intensive psychoanalysis, Elliott Gould is doing a bit of soaring himself.

Last spring, Gould escorted Barbra to the Academy Awards when she won an Oscar for "Funny Girl." But this year, Gould was up for the honor himself for his portrayal of Ted in "Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice." Many think he may be an even stronger Oscar candidate next year for his flipped-out Army surgeon in the recently released "MASH."

Whichever, the once burnt-out star of Elliott Goldstein — only child of a New York garment manufacturer and an aggressive stage-struck mother — is sending out some of the best vibrations in the business.

A lady movie-goer sums up his appeal. "He looks like somebody human, not like a movie star — more like somebody you'd be liable to meet," she says. "He's kind of homely, I guess, but in a sexy sort of way."

Although he likes such talk, Elliott Gould just wants to be Elliott Gould — whatever that is. Hooked on analysis, Gould is constantly tossing the Freudian ball into the air and measuring its bounces.

Looking back, the sometimes funny, sometimes sexy actor states, "Barbra is the most talented person I've ever know," — but will just as quickly explain that during the relationship he was ineffective in his trade.

His professional recovery seems complete, but the Gould psyche is still something short of rock-hard.

"Elliott still doesn't believe in himself 100 per cent," says an old friend. "But his confidence is growing. Anyway, his vulnerability is what comes across and makes him a star."

Gould's strong sense of the natural came by the most artificial of routes. After showing a flair for acting in P.S. 247 in Brooklyn, 8-year-old Elliott Goldstein was carted off to television auditions by his mother. Within a year he was doing regular spots on the Milton Berle Texaco show and the Colgate "Comedy Hour."

By 11, Elliott was tap-dancing his way to mediocrity at the Palace Theatre in New York as the assistant of a last-legs vaudeville hoofer named Jimmy Callahan. "It was so humiliating," grimaces Gould. So went his childhood — dancing to the beat of his mother's ambition.

"I didn't oppose his mother," explains Gould's father, "because I didn't want him to go into the garment industry."

In his teens, Elliott began to assert himself. He chose not to go to college, but to ballet school instead. Later he found occasional work in Broadway dance choruses while serving as an elevator operator between engagements.

A turning point seemed at hand when he won the lead in David Merrick's "I Can Get If For You Wholesale." That's when he met a somewhat awkward girl named Barbra, who was playing a small role. They lived together for a year in a tiny Third Avenue apartment over a restaurant, got married, and Barbra's fortunes zoomed.

"Even Fanny Brice couldn't keep her husband happy in that particular situation," says a man who knew them both at the time. "In the end, Elliott did just what Brice's husband in 'Funny Girl' did — he walked."

During that time, Gould scratched for work. "I would do a show a year," he says, "which meant working about six weeks out of 12 months."

Reluctant to use his wife's highly charged contracts for his own ends, Gould finally struck out on his own — entirely. His first break came when he played opposite Shelly Winters in a production of "luv" staged in Nyack, N.Y., where film director William Friedkin saw something and put him in "The Night They Raided Minskey's."

From then on, it has been pure success — along a trail strewn with self-doubts hang-ups, failures. And now, with more movies on the line, Gould's only problem is maintaining his relaxed acting style. "I've finally learned that the instincts are the fuel to realize your capabilities on. Instincts don't mean much without craft, and I am getting better at i."

Undoubtedly. What's more, nobody calls him Mr. Streisand any more.

String Musicians In Short Supply

By DAVID LANCASHIRE

LONDON — With the jubilant chords of Handel still ringing in his ears, Yehudi Menuhin tapped his baton on his knee and proposed that pop music succeeds where modern symphonies fail.

"Pop in a way is a very good thing — it's captivating and spontaneous and it reflects our times," said the American violinist, who has been glorifying the classics since he became an international celebrity at age 10.

"Music must speak of universal sensations and thoughts and a lot of contemporary composers have lost that. They don't speak of the big emotions — love, or faith, or fear or humor.

MENUHIN

The 54-year-old virtuoso, who pursues music at a pace that would exhaust a teenager, was sitting in the rear of a chauffeur-driven car, heading for his 17th century home in north London. He had spent the day conducting and recording a Handel choral work in the unheated stone vault of a church and he wore a turtleneck sweater against the cold.

Straight from a two-month concert tour in the United States, he had spent a hectic few days rehearsing and recording in London and was packing for a 10-day trip to India, performances in Scandinavia and more concerts in Britain.

"It isn't difficult to work so hard," he said smiling, his sandy hair mussed but his chisel-edged face showing no wrinkles of fatigue. "Because the things I do are interesting things."

Despite the modern programming and jet planes that make such global troubadoring possible, there are things about the modern world that distress Menuhin. One of them is that young string players feel out of place in it.

"The violin is so delicate and subtle an instrument that it requires complete dedication, solitude and privacy — a very special spiritual approach. It isn't suited to the conditions of today, living in apartments, surrounded by distractions. It can't be practised in front of a television set."

Menuhin says pianists and brass players abound because they can work outside the classical field, but he is genuinely alarmed by the scarcity of young string players.

"In the United States the problem is particularly acute. But the teaching there is getting better and better and the music schools turn out numbers of admirable violinists and cellists.

"But for what public? What will they play and who will listen? We are living between the heyday of classical orchestras and literature and some new music. We need listeners, but many of today's composers have lost their link with the music lover . . . They do not speak to the public."

To combat the shortage of budding string musicians and given gifted children an atmosphere in which they can flourish — and not be derided as freaks by other youngsters — Menuhin established a violin institute in 1964 at Stoke d'Abernon, in the rolling Surrey countryside south of London.

Now 34 children from Britain and abroad, 9 to 17 years old, live in family fashion — far less regimented than a regular British boarding school — on the 19th century estate.

For a fee of $1,560 a year — subsidized if necessary; no child has ever been turned down for money reasons — they get a general education and lessons from London's best music teachers. Menuhin himself gives classes when he is in Britain.

The school is supported by the British government's Arts Council, contributions from around the world, and benefit concerts. Whenever Menuhin plays a charity performance, half the proceeds go to the school. Forty or 50 children audition for enrolment every year and about five are accepted.

Rioters Stone U.S. Embassy

BEIRUT (AP) — Palestinian students chanting "Sisco go home!" stoned the American embassy here today in anticipation of the arrival of the United States assistant secretary of state.

Joseph Sisco had left Tel Aviv earlier in the day for Nicosia, Cyprus. From there he was scheduled to fly here for brief talks with Lebanese leaders.

The students broke several windows but did not inflict major damage. They threw volleys of rocks from the tennis court of the American University of Beirut, which adjoins the parking lot at the rear of the embassy.

The demonstrators dispersed after half an hour.

The embassy guard, Lebanese security forces, have been strengthened since Jordanian mobs attacked the American embassy in Amman and burned the U.S. cultural centre, also protesting Sisco's mission.

Sisco had been scheduled to travel to Amman Friday for talks with King Hussein. But two days of guerrilla-led anti-American demonstrations and the promise of more persuaded him to defer that visit.

Apparently offended by the cancelled visit, Jordan responded by calling for the withdrawal of U.S. Ambassador Harrison A. Symmes. In Washington, the state department said it would comply with the request, but not retaliate by asking the Jordanian ambassador to leave the United States.

Sisco, ending a four-day visit to Israel, departed for Cyprus in a special Israeli Air Force Nord Atlas transport plane. He declined to give specific information for his itinerary.

At Lod Airport in Tel Aviv, Sisco refused to comment on the ouster of Symmes from Amman.

MORE TROOP WITHDRAWALS EXPECTED

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the signs pointing to another major withdrawal of United States troops, President Nixon makes his fourth broadcast to the nation Monday night on his effort to scale down U.S. involvement in Vietnam.

The president's address, delayed four days after troubles developed on the Apollo 13 space flight, will originate from the Western White House at San Clemente, Calif.

No time has been set for the so-called "update report," although the broadcast originally set Thursday had been scheduled for 9 p.m.

Defence Secretary Melvin R. Laird provided Wednesday a possible tip to what the president will say, asserting in a spech at Fort Riley, Kan., that Nixon "shortly will announce further reduction in U.S. personnel in Vietnam."

Speculation has put the troop withdrawal announcement at about 50,000 men. If so, this would bring the total number of troop withdrawals to 165,000. The authorized force level in South Vietnam now is 434,000 men after three withdrawals announced by Nixon.

Tugs Check Proposed

VANCOUVER (CP) — Transport Minister Don Jamieson told the Canadian Merchant Service Guild Friday he will propose that a committee be established to receive a report on safety conditions in the West Coast towboat industry.

Mr. Jamieson said in an interview that the committee could include representatives of the guild, towboat owners and the department.

The guild has been protesting that the government has not released the findings of a survey made on the seaworthiness of tugs and conditions aboard the vessels.

Safety and manning of the towboats is a key issue in the guild's current contract dispute with the British Columbia Towboat Owners Association.

Capt. Arnie Davis of the guild said Friday night that Mr. Jamieson's committee proposal will be accepted.

Nixon Pushes Great Lakes Dumping Ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon asked Congress this week to outlaw dumping of polluted dredgings into the Great Lakes, starting with the 35 most polluted harbors.

In a special message, Nixon also ordered a special study, to be completed by Sept. 1, on dumping of dredgings, sludge and other materials into the oceans.

"In the New York area alone," he said, "the amount of annual dumping would cover all of Manhattan Island to a depth of one foot in two years."

Initial emphasis, however, is on the Great Lakes, with Nixon saying his program would mark a major step toward abating pollution there by "by-products of modern technology and large population increases."

Principal legislative requests submitted by the president were:

- A halt to disposal of polluted dredge materials into the lakes by private interests and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers "as soon as land disposal sites are available."
- Establishment by the corps of containment areas to hold the materials that otherwise might go into the lakes.
- A requirement that the states and other non-federal interests pay half the cost of building the containment areas and also provide needed lands and other rights.
- Suspending dredging after one year if the army secretary found that local interests "were not making reasonable progress in attaining disposal sites."

The White House said construction of facilities in the 35-most polluted harbors would cost $70,000,000, of which the federal government would pay half. The cost of operating and maintaining the facilities would be increased $5,000,000 a year "due to the added handling cost of the dredged spoil."

Tight Consumer Credit Controls

By JAMES NELSON

OTTAWA (CP) — The government hopes to have tight consumer credit controls in effect by July 1, and they may form a new regular tool for influencing consumer spending in the economy.

Finance Minister Edgar Benson said in his March 12 budget speech he hoped to have legislation before the Commons in six to eight weeks, after consulting finance companies and other credit granters on the details. That was about 5½ weeks ago.

But the consultations have run longer than expected, and produced more snares in trying to control consumer credit than the government apparently thought was the case. It may be another month before the legislation is ready.

When it is put to the Commons and, presumably, passed, it will be a more sophisticated consumer credit control law than simply an emergency measure to deal with one facet of the current wave of inflation.

It is likely, a government source said, to become a permanent piece of law which can be used much more handily than an emergency bill. In this, it is likely to be akin to British law which enables the U.K. Treasury to control consumer credit flexibly, in relation to any short-term swing in economic activity.

The bill will require minimum down payments and maximum periods within which unpaid balances have to be settled.

Mr. Benson said last month the government, initially at least, would require down payments of 20 per cent where credit is extended for more than one year, and require repayment within 30 months for automobiles, and within 24 months for other purchases.

Once such legislation is in effect, the government would be able to vary the down-payment and repayment terms as needed either to discourage or encourage consumer spending.

Markets Decline, Trading Light

By ART JOHNSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Canadian stock markets dropped sharply this week and posted their second-successive weekly loss.

Markets delinced last week and snapped a two-week advance.

Stocks moved upward strongly after several major American financial institutions cut their prime lending rates to eight per cent from 8½.

Prime rate is the interest charged to a bank's best customers.

Stock market followers believed a similar move in Canada would ease tight-money conditions which have depressed markets since last June.

However, the federal government decided to continue restraint devices on the economy and markets fell in light trading.

Oil prices plummeted this week when hopes for a northern Canada oil plan appeared to be dashed by Imperial Oil's abandonment of two exploratory wells in the Mackenzie River delta area near Imperial's discovery well at Atkinson Point.

Prices had been strong since January.

Speculators had hoped Imperial's Atkinson Point well would prove to be Canada's Prudhoe Bay.

HOUSE STARTS DECLINE SEEN

TORONTO (CP) — The National Housebuilders Association predicted Friday there will be a decline in housing starts in Canada this year but no decline in mortgage interest rates.

Bond Prices Lower

TORONTO (CP) — Prices on the Canadian bond market closed lower in active trading Friday.

The government introduced its Canada refund issue Monday totalling $575,000,000.

The first issue of $375,000,000 is being used to redeem another previous issue of bonds due to mature May 1.

The 7-per-cent issue has two maturing dates, Feb. 1, 1973 and April 1, 1975.

The government also introduced another $200,000,000 in exchange for part of the $1,267,000,000 issues of 1958, due to mature Sept. 1, 1975.

The 9½ per cent, April 30, 1990 issue is now selling at par to yield 9½ per cent.

Day-to-day money ranged from six to seven per cent, closing Friday at 6 per cent.

Wall Street's SOS Ignored

NEW YORK (WP) — Wall Street is sending an SOS to Richard Nixon, but so far it doesn't seem to be getting through.

For the past three weeks — since banks cut their prime lending rates — the stock market has failed to produce the rally that was promised for the first signs of an easing in credit stringency. To analysts and portfolio managers here, that conveys a clear message.

The street is saying that Nixon's economic seers are all wet; that the economy is not going to pull out of its slowdown as quickly and easily as the forecasters say it will; that interest rates are going to remain high; that turning a profit is going to keep getting tougher every day and — most disillusioning of all — that the man in the White House either doesn't see it or doesn't care. In other words, the street is saying, the country is in a hell of a fix and nobody is doing anything about it.

Right now, the money managers say, they would settle for some sign that Washington is facing up to the problems. otherwise, they fear, the stock market will have to fend for itself until the president decides it is time to power up for the 1972 election.

To the money managers, that's what it means when volume falls to an average of something over 9 million shares a day on the New York Stock Exchange. That's what it means when the money-making stocks, the growth issues and the high technology companies, are pounded lower at far more hair-raising rate than the blue chips. And that's what it means when Wall Street gets just what it wanted — a cut in the prime rate — and nobody can find an excuse for a rally.

Right now, for example, Washington's prognosticators say that the economy will begin turning up in the second half of the year — figures on industrial production for March rose after seven straight declines — and that business will be back on the beam in 1971. If the street believed that, the famous discounting mechanism would be churning along. But that hasn't happened — the message isn't getting through.

GOOD CHANNELS

That's all the more surprising because the street probably has better channels to Pennsylvania Avenue than it has had in many years. Bernard J. Lasker, chairman of the NYSE board of governors — and no mean trader himself — is a personal friend of the president. He is the man who delivers the industry's thinking on anti-trust, commission rates, public ownership, and the activities of the Securities and Exchange Commission. It's a cinch that recent Lasker talks with Nixon have not been laugh-fests.

Attorney General John Mitchell, of course, has spent his entire career in Wall Street and doesn't have to have market messages interpreted. Commerce Secretary Maurice Stans spent the "out" years as president of a large brokerage firm and, moving down the line, the executive branch is filled with former wide-eyed Wall Streeters who should be getting their own intelligence from the street.

PROMOTION

Mr. L. E. Kirk, President, Mayfair Realty Ltd. takes pleasure in announcing the promotion of Mr. James Allan to the position of Manager, Real Estate Department, effective immediately.

Unusual Opportunity—Waterfront Motel
9 Units—Lodge—Over 11 Acres

Owner's other interests necessitate the early sale of this prime waterfront property. Located on a large Gulf Island, there are 9 modern units completely furnished plus a large lodge for the owners and additional guests. The location offers warm, safe swimming from a sandy beach, boating, clam and oyster picking plus many other attractions. Golf course just one mile away. The present development is confined to one corner of the property leaving room for practically unlimited expansion. Bookings for the coming season are already considerable, and present professional management would probably continue if desired. This property is currently clear title but the owner is prepared to give generous terms to a qualified buyer or will consider trade for a revenue property. Full price.................. $135,000

YOUR TAXES

By I. H. ASPER

Higher Rents Would Wipe Out Tax Cuts

The general consensus amongst many of the lawyers and accountants who attend the recent Canadian Tax Foundation Conference in Montreal, after listening to government spokesmen resolutely defend the tax reform basket, is that the government is not inclined to accept changes in the substance, merely in the form of its tax proposals.

It would be unfortunate if the debate were to end abruptly because the public felt the government was extending a deaf ear.

There are still many effects of the tax reform plan which haven't gained public attention. One question yet to be answered is whether or not low-income taxpayers are willing to trade their tax reductions for higher living costs.

The tax reform package is held out as being tough on the middle and high income groups in order to be lenient on the lower income earners. If this were really the case, the argument would have merit. But on almost any analysis, it becomes clear that any tax relief afforded the low income scale will be more than eroded by increased prices for the necessities of life.

Take the cost of housing. Ignoring special situations, the highest tax cut awarded under the white paper amounts to about $10 per month for the married taxpayer with two dependent children.

WIPE OUT CUT

Whithout any other intervening factors, and leaving aside inflationary price increases even at 3 per cent per year which in itself would wipe out his tax redution, the cost of the goods he buys from corporations will rise as they pass on to their customers the $600 million tax increase they face.

Housing costs by themselves may rise more than the tax reduction. Last year Ottawa levied new taxes on the interest income earned by life insurance companies, the chief sources of home mortgages. Interest rates were promptly increased to cover the lenders' new taxes. Interest costs on new homes one year ago were about 9¼ per cent. Today they are about 10¾ per cent.

Thus the interest cost per month, or the apartment rent charged to cover the mortgage interst of the owner, on a modest low-cost $10,000 housing unit (if there is such a thing) has risen by $12.50 per month — $2 more than the maximum tax cut.

The white paper proposes to tax, at full income tax rates, even the inflationary gains made when the owner of an apartment building sells. If that occurs, Canada will be ignoring the experience of many other western countries. New Zealand, South Africa, Australia and, under some circumstances, Japan, Sweden, Finland, Spain, Germany, Holland and Italy do not levy a capital gains tax on apartment or housing properties. France, Belgium, Denmark and Brazil levy a nominal tax (10 to 15 per cent) after allowing a reduction in the taxable profit to take inflation into account.

REDUCED RATE

The United States and England allow tax deferral if the property is traded for another and the capital gains tax is levied at a reduced rate.

One Canadian economist suggests that the sophisticated apartment owner will now begin building into his rent the eventual capital gains tax he will pay on his inflationary gain. He estimateds this, alone, ignoring inflation and local tax increased, will increase apartment rents by 35 to 40 per cent.

On top of that, it's estimated that the attractiveness of mortgage investments will be further reduced because of the white paper's tax bias in favor of equity investments. If this occurs, interest rates, and rents, will continue to rise.

The white paper also increases substantially the taxes on the apartment owner's income. This results from the reduction in the depreciation deductions he will be able to claim for tax purposes.

This should produce one of two results. Either the owners will raise their rents to recover their increased taxes, or fewer buildings will be built. If the latter, demand will exceed supply and rents will rise. No mater how one examines it, there's little doubt that the maximum tax cut of 30 cents per day will be dwarfed by the increased rentals the taxpayer will have to pay.

YOUNG CHALLENGERS ABOUND . . . . . . QUALIFYING ROUND SUNDAY

Youth Brigade Set for Times Open Charge

The 1970 Times Vancouver Island Open golf championship gets under way Sunday, and it may be remembered as the year of the charge of the youth brigade.

A field of 166 swingers, all boasting handicaps of nine or less, is primed to start in the 18-hole qualifying test at Uplands Golf Club.

The entry includes defending champion Norm Boden of Cowichan, former titleholders Lawrie Kerr, Laurie Carroll and Bill McColl, some former finalists, and a flock of eager young challengers.

There have been good young challengers who have chased the Times Trophy in the past. Never, however, have there been so many. The field is liberally endowed with talented young belters who must be conceded an excellent chance of victory in the six-week trial.

The youth brigade includes various club champions. Cedar Hill's Jim Girard, Ron Howard of Colwood, Gorge Vale's Dave Mick and big Carl Schwantje of Victoria all won club crowns while still juniors last year.

Only Uplands' Bob Hunt — an "old man" in his 30s — prevented juniors from completely sweeping club championships. Hunt, the only plus-one handicap golfer entered, also is bidding for Island Open honors.

Schwantje, Mick and Cec Ferguson must be rated as the favorites of the youth brigade.

Schwantje is one of three amateurs playing to scratch, and capable of reclaiming Open honors from the professionals. Uplands' Mike Gray and Rick Kent of Glen Meadows — who also can be classed as members of the youth brigade — are others who play to a zero handicap.

In addition to the club champs, amateur hopes also are bouyed by the showing of a pair of Uplands youngsters in the District Golf Committee's winter-time medal series. Al Brown, playing to a three handicap, won the amateur medal in the 54-hole autumn series while Nott, who has a two handicap, won the spring medal.

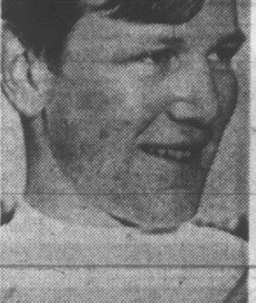
But the ultimate reward still remains some distance away.

Sunday's immediate concern is qualification.

Only the low 32 scorers move into match play which gets under way the following weekend at Victoria Club. Play then moves to Colwood, Glen Meadows and Gorge Vale before returning to Uplands for the 36-hole finals on May 24.

At the same time, another 32 golfers will qualify for a handicap division and the Hugh Francis Trophy.

The draw is published below.



CARL SCHWANTJE

Bill WALKER

Meanwhile the visitor from Virginia was explaining how he happened to get involved in a fracas with a policeman in North Carolina. Colin Kilburn hadn't changed much. Perhaps a little heavier, but that could be explained. He was showing off the results of a successful winter in the south.

The former Cougar, player and coach, was just passing by after having coached the Salem Rebels into second place in the southern division of the Eastern Hockey league. For that he had been rewarded with a contract for next year as general manager and coach.

"It was a good season," he said. "My team did well enough, and the fact we lost in the playoffs was mostly bad luck. Injuries hurt the club badly, and in the last game we finished with nine men. As it was, three of the games went into overtime. Only one was decided by more than one goal I even became unretired, twice."

"Freddie Creighton coached Charlotte," Kilburn grinned. "And we had some good battles."

And "battles" is probably the word for it, and for Kilburn and his Rebels. For the team name had a ring to it, as well.

"Oh, yeah, Fred and I had a few misunderstandings," Kilburn reminisced "But then we knew one another from the Western League," he recalled. "So it helped to make things interesting." (The Hockey News reported one interesting engagement. It said Creighton was furious at being fined $100 while Kilburn got off with $50 for one physical dispute).

But about that policeman?

"Well, it was one of those after-the-game things," Kilburn said . "One of the Charlotte players had deliberately kicked at one of my players, and I just wanted to ask the referee why he didn't call a penalty on the play."

"This policeman got between us, and when he wouldn't allow me to speak to the referee, I guess I pushed him. At any rate he was at fault for being there. He admitted it later and the whole thing was settled rather peacefully."

(The original report said Kilburn hit the policeman, and the policeman hit the floor).

Kilburn later suggested there was no reason to doubt it.

But then Kilburn never did leave a passive impression. People either admired him, or violently disagreed with him. Which is probably what happened at Charlotte, and at Salem.

There were a lot of little notes which appeared in the Hockey News from time to time that alluded to Kilburn's commitment to fight for any principle he believed in, and, if necessary, to take abuse to get it.

Such as:

On Jan. 23 a report said: "Kilburn unhappy with linesman at Greensboro."

Then on March 6: "Kilburn kicked dressing room wall."

And these items:

"Kilburn fined $150 for ruckus when goalie Jim Letcher punched referee . . . Kilburn a $50 fine . . . Kilburn fined for fight . . ."

But at only 5'9" in a land of bigger men, what other weapon can a little guy have?

Intimidation and his ability to back it up have been Kilburn's most popular defence for years.

And he could play hockey, too.

He was an all-star more than once at left wing in the Western League. He is 12th in the alltime list of WHL point scorers; he is also 12th in assists, and in the top 20 in goals scored.

He will be recalled here for having stirred the biggest storm ever to hit Memorial Arena.

Fired as coach of the Cougars in mid-season, in 1957-58, he was traded to Edmonton for Denny Olson and Tom McCarthy. There was a furore over the club action and at a heated emergency meeting of the team shareholders, the directors finally won a vote of confidence.

The next night Kilburn returned with the Flyers and the biggest crowd ever to see a hockey game in Memorial Arena, 5,433, gave him a tremendous ovation.

Kilburn responded in the only way he knew. He scored the first goal of the game as Edmonton beat the Cats 5-3.

Since then there have been stops at Springfield, Vancouver, Spokane, and then Long Beach, in California. The California junket was made in concert with former Vancouver coach Art Chapman. Kilburn was to coach a club at Bakersfield in a new league. But that arrangement had an unfortunate ending. Chapman died from a heart attack.

It was then back to Spokane, as coach, for a time.

"And I still haven't been told why I was fired," he said.

"Last summer I received a call from Keith Allen at Philadelphia asking me if I wanted to get back in hockey," he continued.

"I said where? He said Salem. I said sure. And this is why I'm out at the coast now. I wanted to see what arrangements I could get with Bud Poile on players. We are an independent club. Philadelphia did give us some assistance last season. But we can always use more."

Then there was that other headline in the Hockey News: "Kilburn named southern coach of the year."

It had been a good winter.

Regals Take Opener In Intermediate Final

POWELL RIVER, B.C. (CP)—Powell River Regals, sparked by the three-goal performance of captain Rob Carmen, defeated Val D'Or, Que., Olympics 6-4 Friday night in the opening game of the Canadian intermediate 'A' hockey final.

Second game of the best-of-five series will be here tonight, with the third Sunday.

Powell River and Val D'Or were tied 1-1 at the end of the first period, but Regals took a 4-2 lead in the second and never looked back.

Val D'Or goaltender Rene Lafrenier was brilliant, blocking 30 shots. Ed Hyland of Powell River stopped 27.

Cater's Triple Helps Yankees To Snap Skid

By The Associated Press

Dave Johnson, a bright young man and possessor of a Golden Glove, helped hand the New York Yankees a victory with a fielding lapse and the Baltimore Orioles second baseman didn't even touch the ball in question.

And, that was Johnson's problem.

The boo-boo helped, the Yankees snap a three-game losing skein as Danny Cater followed with a bases-clearing, two-out triple in the 11th inning, securing a 4-1 triumph for New York Friday night and sending the Orioles reeling to their third loss in a row after five straight victories.

In the only other scheduled American League contests, Detroit Tigers nipped Boston Red Sox in 11 innings, 3-2, Oakland Athletics rapped Minnesota Twins 5-2, and Kansas City Royals trimmped California Angels 7-5.

The Yanks and Orioles were locked in a 1-1 tie after 10 innings. Mel Stottlemyre limiting the Orioles to five hits in nine innings. Baltimore's Tom Phoebus allowed two hits in eight.

RUDE RECEPTION

Dick Hall, the 39-year-old right-handed reliever came on for the Birds inthe 11th and was greeted by Horace Clarke's single. Two outs later, Clarke had moved to second on a ground out.

Roy White was intentionally walked. Pinch swinger Pete Ward bounced to shortstop Mark Belanger, who had nowhere to throw as Johnson, the AL's top fielding second baseman in 1969 and Golden Glove winner, failed to cover second. The official scorer charged Johnson with an error, setting up the winning rally.

Lindy McDaniel, with two scoreless innings of relief, grabbed the victory for the Yanks, dropping the Orioles to second in the East.

GETS BIG DOUBLE

Jim Northrup boomed an 11th inning double, scoring Al Kaline from first as the Tigers streaked into first place over Baltimore, gaining their fourth straight triumph.

The win snapped a three-game winning skein by the Red Sox, who got both their runs on Reggie Smith's two-run homer in the opening inning.

McCOVEY HOT

Willie McCovey is in nightly orbit and Ken Henderson is out of sight, but San Francisco is still losing the National League's space race to the roaring Cincinnati Reds.

McCovey slammed his fourth home run in as many games and Henderson cracked two hits for a .478 batting average — tops in the majors — but Cincinnati rode five homers, the last two by Hal McRae and Tony Perez in the ninth inning, to an 8-5 victory over the Giants.

But McRae, pinch hitting to open the bottom of the ninth, tied the game with his first major league homer and Perez' fifth homer of the young season, a three-run wallop off Frank Linzy, gave the Reds their fourth straight victory.

In other National League games, Houston downed San Diego 4-1; the New York Mets battered Philadelphia 6-0; the Chicago Cubs edged Montreal 8-7 and St. Louis beat Pittsburgh 5-2. Los Angeles' game at Atlanta was postponed because of wet grounds.

Calgary, Terriers Set Volleyball Pace

Calgary and Esquimalt Terriers appeared the teams to beat as play in the Canadian tournament moved into the homestretch today at the CFB Esquimalt gymnasium.

The Calgary spikers and setters were out in front with a 14-4 record going into this morning's final round of preliminary competition, which was to send four teams into a playoff for the title won last year by the Terriers.

Esquimalt was clipped 2-1 by Kingston Friday, but bounced back to trim Soest, Germany, 3-0 and grab second place with a 13-5 record. After losing to Greenwood, N.S., 2-1, Kingston is third at 12-6.

Calgary took 3-0 triumphs over Bagotville, Que., and Ottawa.

Calgary, Esquimalt and Kingston have all clinched playoff spots in the eight-team tourney and the other berth was destined for either Soest (9-9), Ottawa (8-10) or Greenwood (7-11).

Semi-final playoffs were to start at 2 p.m. today with the final to follow about an hour later.

Lew Alcindor, Chamberlain Supply Spark

By Associated Press

Lew Alcindor grabbed a record 31 rebounds and combined with Bob Dandridge for 55 points to pace Milwaukee Bucks to a 101-96 victory over New York Knicks in the third game of the National Basketball Association's Eastern Division final Friday.

New York leads the best-of-seven series, 2-1, with the teams playing game No. 4 Sunday in Milwaukee.

Alcindor, the 7-foot-1 NBA "rookie-of-the-year," scored 33 points, 20 in the first half, while Dandridge added 22, with 15 coming in the first two periods.

The 7-foot-1 Chamberlain had missed nine of 15 free throws before Bill Bridges fouled him in the waning seconds. Wilt's first charity toss ripped through the nets without hitting the ring and his second spun in.

The teams meet again on Sunday.

Blues' Fans Tough

ST. LOUIS (CP) — St. Louis Blues are aiming at their third try for the Stanley Cup and National Hockey League playoff supremacy when they open their best-of-seven semi-final Sunday against Pittsburgh Penguins.

And they have a lot going for them—momentum, experience, perhaps the most aggressive home fans in the league and Norm Kramer.

While the Penguins have been resting since bouncing Oakland Seals out of contention in four straight games, the Blues have been battling the tenacious Minnesota North Stars through a six-game quarter-final. They finally clinched their semi-final berth Thursday night.

And, they did it just the way they wanted, before their exhuberant fans under the imaginative direction of arena organist Norm Kramer, credited throughout the league as being a major factor in the Blues dominance of the Western Division throughout it's three-year existence.

SOLID RECORD

So dominant have the Blues been that they have won the division every year, overcome two previous challenges to their playoff position and gone to the final in both previous tries.

This year they face Red Kelly's surging Penguins, their closest rivals over the regular season, although second in the final standings by a gaping 22 points.

Most experts expect the Blues to make the final for the third straight year, on the basis of their final league standing, their playoff maturity and the roof-raising support they get from the 16,000-plus fans that annually jam their way into the sweltering St. Louis Arena to cheer them on.

HABS LOSE OUT

But this year the script would be changed since the Canadiens failed to make the playoffs and the opposition will be either Boston Bruins or Chicago Black Hawks, who open their best-of-seven see in Chicago Sunday at 11 a.m. PST.

Among the most mature of the Blues are their perennial scoring leaders Red Berenson, Ab McDonald and Phil Goyette, the only Western Division players among the playoff scoring leaders.

Berenson is tied for fifth with nine points on four goals and five assists with McDonald sixth on five goals and three assists and Goyette tied for 10th spot on one goal and six assists.

Momentum With Bruins

CHICAGO (CP) — Boston Bruins, with momentum going for them, are due to sneak in today for their best-of-seven series with the rested Chicago Black Hawks in the Eastern Division playoff final of the National Hockey League.

The Bruins, fresh from their brawling 4-2 eastern semi-final series victory over New York Rangers, will be taken into seclusion by coach Harry Sinden until the opening whistle at 11 a.m. PST. Sunday. All the Boston players were reported healthy.

Chicago, practising and resting for the last week after sweeping their semi-finals against Detroit Red Wings in four games, will work out again today.

AS IT SHOULD BE

"This is the way it should be," Varga said. "Us and Boston—we went to the wire for first place, played even against each other over the season and played some great games."

Chicago coach Billy Reay declines to predict how long the series will go. "After a season like this, who can predict anything?" he said.

"There is going to be a lot of hard checking and lots of fore-checking by both sides. I hope the winner has something left for the final."

Magnusson said he was concerned about this club's week-long layoff.

"I'm just afraid we will be flat for at least the first period of the first game," he said. "The layoff has to take something out of us."

NOT IMPOSING

The rookie isn't overawed by his first Stanley Cup playoff. "We had such a tough race that the playoffs didn't seem too imposing."

Chicago and Boston tied for first place in the Eastern Division with 99 points each but the Hawks officially took the Prince of Wales Cup by virtue of having won more games—45 to 40. Boston, however, has outscored the Hawks 21 goals to 19 in games between the two teams.

Tony Esposito, the rookie goalie who won the Vezina Trophy in carrying the Hawks to the eastern title, gets his big tune-up today.

"I've been building up slowly during these workouts, and tomorrow they better force me to extend myself," he said. "I need a hard workout."

TRUDEAU REPLIES . . . . . . TO HOCKEY BOSSES

Sympathy With Taxpayer

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau suggested Friday that he has little sympathy with the concern of National Hockey League executives that the government's proposed tax changes will endanger the sales of season's tickets to large corporations.

"I don't see why a father who wants to take his son to a game should have to pay $5 for a ticket when the corporations have to pay only $2.50 and the rest is paid by the taxpayers," Mr. Trudeau told reporters.

The issue was raised earlier in the Commons by Barnett Danson L—York North who referred to testimony before the Senate banking and finance committee this week by representatives of the Montreal Forum and Maple Leaf Gardens.

David Molson of Montreal and George Mara of Toronto claimed tax changes would prevent businesses from writing off the cost of season's tickets as a legitimate expense and could result in sales of the Canadian NHL clubs to U.S. interests.

Six Front-Nine Birds Help Archer Grab Lead

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — George Archer shot a 67 Friday for a 36-hole total of 133 to take the second-round lead in the $125,000 Greater New Orleans open golf tournament.

He took command early on the par-72, 7,080-yard course with six birdies on the front nine where he needed only 12 putts and moved into a two-stroke lead.

It was a day of mixed performances for some of golf's top shooters. Lee Trevino got back into the act with a 69 for a 141 while Gary Player of South Africa had all sorts of putting woes, including a four-putt 12th hole, and stumbled to a 140 with a 74. Masters champion Billy Casper and Orville Moody joined by six others at 138.

Both Canadians in the tournament made the cutoff point of 144. Wayne Vollmer of Vancouver shot a 70 for a 141 total and Wilf Homenuik of Winnipeg barely made it with 144, shooting a 71 after a one-over-par 73 Thursday.

Archer is no stranger to success over the Lakewood Country Club course. He won here in 1968 and set a tournament record of 271 doing it.

Victoria and District Ladies' Golf Association's annual two-ball foursomes event appears to be an exceptionally popular competition with distaff swingers.

Starting with the qualifying round next Friday at the Uplands course, this year's contest has attracted a record entry and 122 two-player teams are scheduled to seek the title, which will be defended by the Gorge Vale pair of Ivy Blunt and Elsie Saunders.

From the 18-hole qualifying round, 16 twosomes will earn places in championship play while the others will continue in flights events.

DOUG BAIRD CAPTURES TENPIN SPOT

Doug Baird of Youbou has claimed the men's tenpin award in the 25th week of the Times' "Bowler-of-the-Week" contest.

Baird began his 648 series with a powerful 255 game and tagged on efforts of 213 and 180 to top his division for the first time.

The winning series, rolled in the Men's Tenpin League at Youbou Community Bowling Alleys, also qualifies Baird for berth in "Bowler-of-the-Year" rolloffs on May 10.

College Grads Signed by Lions

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Lions of the Canadian Football League have signed Canadian draft choice Robert Taylor from McGill University and Harold Brown, a graduate of Kent State, Ohio.

Taylor, 23, was an offensive tackle last season with McGill. He is 6-4, 240 pounds and is a native of Montreal.

Brown, 25, is from Brantford, Ont., and played college football at Kent State as a wide receiver. He is 6-0, 180 pounds.

Lengthy Layoff For Reds' Hurler

A Cincinnati spokesman said Maloney will be wearing various types of casts for eight weeks and then will have to undergo a "rehabilitation period."

Yankee Fighter Ends Losing Skein

VANCOUVER (CP) — Yankee Fighter, without a victory for more than a year, lead all the way Friday night to win the featured eighth race at Exhibition Park.

Owned by Adolph Fritz of Victoria and ridden by Alan Cuthbertson, the seven-year-old bay gelding easily beat Bunny's Buddy by two lengths to pay $8.70, the smallest win price of the night.

The entry of Island Duchess and Kim's Tuffy, both owned by Swift Acres and trained by Peter Baumgartner, finished one-two on the seventh to pay $20, $16.60 and $10.70.

Basil Frazier, who rode two winners, picked up his first win on a disqualification in the first race. He finished second on Supreme Puck, but was moved up when the stewards ruled that first-place Double Pretty interfered with third-place Kan Lic and Mornmore in fourth. Double Pretty was moved to fifth.

The Exacto of Supreme Puck and Kan Lic paid $52.10.

The ninth-race Exacto of Mr. Dixon and Sir Con returned $73.50.

Lenoloc and Peter Pit paid $38.10 in the fourth-race quinella while the tandem of Early May and Patterbum in the sixth returned $58.90.

Former Catcher, Dick Brown Dies

BALTIMORE (AP) — Dick Brown, 35, a former Baltimore Orioles' catcher stricken with a brain tumor during the 1966 spring training season, died Friday of the malignancy.

A veteran of nine seasons in the major leagues, Brown joined the Orioles in 1963 and played through the 1965 season. He also played with Cleveland, Chicago and Detroit.

"I chased her till she caught me.
But I was the one who made the decision to buy the ring at Birks."
"I wanted to make sure I was getting a diamond that was full value for the price I was paying. And June wanted a far-out setting like the one a friend of hers has.
We both found what we were looking for at Birks. They've added some new qualities of diamonds to their line which meant that we could buy a less expensive ring, but, because it's Birks, be sure we were getting the quality we were paying for.
The setting June chose was wild and wonderful. And we'll exchange the diamond for a larger one in a few years when I can afford it. Birks makes it easy to do this."

WEEKEND TV MOVIES

TONIGHT

7 p.m., Channel 11: The Story of Esther Costello (1957 drama), Joan Crawford, Rossano Brazzi. Outrageous melodrama about a group of greedy promoters who exploit a mute girl.

8 p.m., Channel 2: Les Miserables (1935 drama), Frederic March, Charles Laughton. Fine performance by Fredric March in Victor Hugo's classic of a man who went to prison for stealing a loaf of bread.

9 p.m., Channels 5 and 8: The Ballad of Josie (1968 comedy), Doris Day, Peter Graves, George Kennedy. Trials and tribulations of a young widow.

9 p.m., Channel 12: The Nun's Story (1959 drama), Audrey Hepburn, Peter Finch, Edith Evans. The story follows a young girl through her convent days and her work in Africa—excellent performances.

11 p.m., Channel 11: Close to My Heart (1951 drama), Ray Milland, Gene Tierney. Soap opera plot about a couple who adopt the baby of a convicted murderer.

11:30, Channel 7: Love Me Tender (1956 western), Elvis Presley, Richard Egan, Debra Paget. This Civil War western introduced Elvis to film audiences—predictable plot.

11:40, Channel 2: The World in His Arms (1952 drama), Gregory Peck, Ann Blyth, Anthony Quinn. An adventure set amid the rancorous, lawless period when fur traders brought their cargoes to San Francisco.

11:45, Channel 12: Trial (1955 drama), Glenn Ford, Dorothy McGuire, Arthur Kennedy. An absorbing drama about the murder trial of a Mexican boy—Arthur Kennedy a standout.

1 a.m., Channel 4: Battle at Bloody Beach (1961 drama), Audie Murphy, Gary Cooper. Second World War movie on location in the Philippines.

SUNDAY

6 p.m., Channel 11: Track of the Cat (1954 drama), Robert Mitchum, Teresa Wright. A cougar hunt amid family squabbles.

6 p.m., Channel 12: The Sea Shall Not Have Them (1954 English drama), Michael Redgrave. Attempts to rescue plane crew from a rubber raft in the North Sea—good drama, well acted.

9 p.m., Channel 4: The Fall of the Roman Empire (1964 drama), Sophia Loren, Stephen Boyd, Alec Guinness, James Mason. This spectacle focuses on a power struggle for the throne of Marcus Aurelius.

11:20, Channel 6: Les Miserables (see Saturday).

11:40, Channel 2: The Fugitive (1947 drama), Henry Fonda. Gripping, superb drama about a priest who refuses to support anti-cleric government in Mexico.

March Washes Out

SASKATOON (CP) — A protest march against U.S. actions in Vietnam and USAF bomber flights over Saskatchewan was cancelled Friday when only 20 persons turned up at the starting point. U.S. B-52 bombers are making mock bombing runs over parts of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

THE JOGGER introduced the Cosby show. Bill Cosby (above) came on strong and the episode won him an instant following. It's repeated Sunday at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 5.

TREACHER . . . has sinecure

From My Side Of the Tube . . .

By WALTER McKINNON

Some local faces will be popping up on the CTV network this Sunday evening. A mobile crew was in town early this week taping interviews with commercial fishermen, for a segment on W5 at 9 p.m. on Channel 8.

It should be worth watching . . . besides spotting a familiar face or two, you might get something out of the production.

CTV, Canada's second network, is building up an impressive record for its public affiars and documentary productions. In spite of a chronic budget problem (something which rarely disturbs the sleep of CBC executives, I understand) CTV manages to turn out some outstanding factual reports.

There must be a message buried in this situation.

On the general subject of documentaries and public affairs shows, Channel 5 is devoting its Today show at 7 p.m. Monday to that ever-so-popular crisis — environmental pollution. There may be something new in the show, but it's not likely.

Tonight

Musical Potpourri Department

True Grit gets a bit of good-natured ribbing tonight from Glen Campbell, Johnny Cash and impressionist Rich Little (GLEN CAMPBELL, 6 p.m., Channel 12) and the finale is a double-barrelled salute to Johnny Cash in the form of a salute to railroads.

Andy Williams goes around for the foruth time with his episode featuring Jonathan Winters and Jo Anne Worley (7:30 p.m., Channel 5) but if you haven't seen it yet, tune in. Winters is hilarious when he starts ad-libbing the sound affects for background to Andy's fairy tale narration.

Danny Thomas and Jimmie Rodgers join Jimmie Durante (DURANTE PRESENTS THE LENNON SISTERS, 9:30 p.m., Channel 4) for a salute to Seattle. Durante and Thomas are explorers Lewis and Clark; the Lennons do a comedy number and Danny sings a song.

The Canadian Saturday night music effort (COUNTRY-TIME, 10:30 p.m., Channel 2) has so far proven to be mediocre at best . . . and sometimes worse. Tonight's entry doesn't look promising but the numbers include Ribbon of Darkness, It's Such a Pretty World, Crazy Tricks and Truck Drivin' Man.

And Don Messer's still hanging in there (DON MESSER'S JUBILEE, 8:30 p.m., Channel 12).

Nonviolence Department

Alice and Trixie decide their husbands have been neglecting them. (JACKIE GLEASON, 7 p.m., Channel 8; 7:30, Channels 7, 12) so the two women decide to do something about it . . . make them give up their nights out with the boys. Norton and Ralph object, and that makes for a story.

Lisa's jet-setting mother (GREEN ACRES, 9 p.m., Channel 7) makes a surprise visit, much to Oliver's dismay. But it creates some hot times in little old Hooterville. Actress Lilia Skala is priceless in the guest role, complete with chauffeur-driven auto and wolfhound.

Violence Department

There's a good action hour in Eagles Sometimes Can't Fly (MANNIX, 10 p.m., Channel 7). Mannix and his secretary join forces to put the heat on a spoiled rich kid after a Negro and a halfbreed are caught in the middle during a liquor store murder and make a run for it. There's sex, suspense, artful camera shots and a police lieutenant who is neither idiot nor heavy, played by Robert Reed.

Sunday

More Glen Campbell Department

Dionne Warwick, Roy Clark and Glen Campbell sing (GLEN CAMPBELL GOODTIME HOUR, 7:30 p.m., Channel 8, 9, Channel 7) and a new pair of TV comics, Gaylord and Holiday, give impressions of a neophyte airline hijacker and a Britisher's version of a western sheriff.

Bill Cosby Department

Hey, Hey, Hey, It's Fat Albert (7:30 p.m., Channels 2 and 6) has Bill Cosby reliving a boyhood football saga with the help of a half-hour cartoon animation. The Tackle Championship of the Entire World is up for grabs and Cosby's Eagles have been challenged by the fearsome Green Street Terrors. Fat Albert's the key . . . with him, it's a cinch and without him they're lost. It's a rerun show, but one of the best so don't miss it.

The classic spisode which introduced coach Chet Kincaid (BILL COSBY, 8:30 p.m., Channel 5) is run again. Though we get nothing of his activity as a high school teacher he's good jogging down the street to keep in shape and obeying an impulse to answer a pay phone, which gets him involved in an auto mechanic's domestic strife and leads to a run-in with police.

Old Stoneface Department

Ed Sullivan (8 p.m., Channels 2, 6, 7, 12) presents a film on Paul McCartney, late of the Beatles, and his family at home in England. McCartney sings a song from his coming solo record album. Elsewhere on the show, you'll see the usual Sullivan variety.

Forsyte Problems Department

The major conflict from which so much of the Forsyte Saga emanates and around which so much of its tragedies stem makes its mark in this episode (8 p.m., Channel 9; 9 p.m., Channels 2 and 6). It is, of course, Soames' consuming love for Irene, the woman of all women least likely to love a man of his life style, with its awesome precision and practicality. This is a vital episode for followers of this series, and one well performed by Eric Porter as Soames and Nyree Dawn Porter as Irene.

WHAT THIS COUNTRY NEEDS IS MORE GRUMBLERS

Stating a Case for the Chronic Old Grouch

By CHARLES WITBECK

HOLLYWOOD—What this country needs is more grumblers.

This comes from a dour old man, Arthur Treacher, Merv Griffin's associate, who makes a very comfortable living grousing. You'd think Treacher would want to keep quiet about his secret in an age where friendship, the big smile, the glad hand and assumed interest are considered essential to getting ahead.

But Arthur isn't worried about competition. The man has sinecure with his boss who only asks, "When will you have had enough?"

"When I feel badly," answers Arthur. Going on 76, he knows full well the beauties of his position. No other job could come close in matching benefits.

Treacher leaves his house at three in the afternoon, and returns at 8:45 in the evening, having performed, and taken time for drink and probably an excellent dinner at Sardi's, or some other good restaurant, where he reacts kindly to acclaim and familiarity from guests and waiters.

He represents the grand old man accustomed to receiving tribute and respect from associates, and he doesn't have to do a blasted thing in return, except peal off a few anecdotes about Hollywood days, or put on a look of disgust for the television camera when the guest becomes a bore.

The man doesn't even have to think to live this way.

Treacher really clinched this dream job by submitting to 85 minutes of silence on an old Griffin show, listening to guests prattle on, before he broke in with "I think you're all idiots."

"Is that all you did?" questioned Griffin, trying to recall how the show went off.

"That's enough," Treacher replied, and his boss agreed.

Naturally, any employer with this kind of forbearance deserves recognition. Arthur puts Merv at the top of the list with this example of the understanding leader.

He was grumbling a bit before the show one afternoon within earshot of the host, who touched Treacher on the arm and said, "You seem to be in bad temper. Go get yourself a drink before we begin."

Mr. Treacher's temper is decidedly on the bilious side these days because of a hepatitis bout, which means laying off the alcohol, a condition foreign to the man. "I have always been a credit to the distillery people," he said, anxious not to ruin his image.

Perhaps a liking for drink and bad temper go hand in hand. The perfect example is W. C. Fields, a man lionized by the young, a type needed desperately for their lack of humanity to the kiddies.

Treacher isn't quite sure whether he agrees with this line of reasoning, but he knows grumbling is welcomed by youth. With Arthur this attitude came more or less by accident.

In his Hollywood days, Treacher was typecast as the English butler, competing for parts with Eric Blore. The two finally met in an M.G.M. picture in which they were rude to each in church, and Treacher admits he was far nicer than Blore, who "grumbled beautifully" even off the screen, but he picked up Eric's trade secret.

Treacher doesn't expose his true nature on the air. Most of the act is a put-on, since it would take effort to use true feelings which are kept hidden.

The actor claims he has a black heart, and says he's sick to death of "everyone sitting around on their hind ends talking about pollution, and not doing anything about it." If you're going to beef, action must follow, an English tradition.

Naturally, at his age, grousing without backing it up is accepted. The trick is to do it with humor, and not become a bore. Wit is essential, a good memory necessary, plus an ear for the latest anecdote.

Treacher keeps in touch through cab drivers, newsboys, waiters and doormen. "I never send food back," he reports, "nor am I ever rude to waiters, doormen or taxi drivers. I even let some call me Artie, which like Perc, is an abomination."

For his pleasure, Mr. Treacher merely reads and frequents Aqueduct race track, an 18-minute ride from home. As for television, he never looks at the set. "It's too exciting," he says, deadpan.

Tahiti's Seductive Lure Undiminished by Centuries

By HARRY E. MERCER

Captain Samuel Wallis really started something when two centuries ago he told tales in England of Tahiti's seductive charms.

He wasn't the only one to do so and before long the image of a paradise island far off in the South Seas grew to romantic proportions in the minds of all who heard about it.

Captain Cook wrote of his "Beloved Isle." The crew of the Bounty mutinied to stay there. Gauguin deserted Paris and his family for Tahiti's sake and over the years scores of writers have striven to describe its siren lure.

Today, despite the Jet Age and a mushrooming of luxury hotels, the magic of Tahiti's charms persists.

Tahiti is figure-eight in shape and consists mainly of three great mountains thrusting up from the sea. A narrow coastal plain runs right round both loops of the eight and this is where nearly everyone lives, their tree-smothered villages facing the sea with bright green mountains back of them.

The sea itself is a variegation of pale blues and greens out as far as the encircling coral reefs, where it suddenly turns dark blue.

The Tahitians, as of old, have a pervasive sense of beauty. As if their island were not beautiful enough already, they do their best to beautify it more.

All their villages are festooned with flowers and they plant flowering shrubs alongside the roads, often far from their own homes.

Tahitians also have a great love of personal adornment. Both men and women wear sweet-scented leis and crowns of intertwined leaves and blossoms. You even see longshoremen toiling on the wharves with hibiscus or frangipani blossoms tucked behind their ears.

If with all this Tahiti still doesn't come up to your romantic expectations it's worth remembering there are more than 100 other islands in French Polynesia.

Most accessible of the others are Moorea, a 12-mile ferry trip from Papeete, and Bora Bora, a 125-mile flight. These islands are little changed since the days before the tourist invasion began.

It's worth the trip to Moorea merely to see Cook's Bay, which many have claimed to be the world's most beautiful island. The sharp peaks that reflect in the bay's dark green waters, incidentally, were used as background in the Bali Hai sequence of the movie South Pacific.

Bora Bora, locally famed for the skill of its dancers and outrigger sailors, has a hotel that looks more traditionally Polynesian than many of the nearby villages.

It nestles in a coconut plantation overlooking a magnificently scenic lagoon, a setting that should fulfil anyone's dream of a paradise island.

HE CLIMBS FOR TOURISTS

Coconuts Supply His Bread

By DON LeBLANC

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada (CP) — Stanley Hall climbs coconut trees for a living. He says it's "for peanuts."

With bare hands and feet, he shimmies up and down trees as high as 60 feet, knocking coconuts to the ground before they fall on their own, perhaps on the head of an unsuspecting tourist.

"Not many people get hit," he says with a grin. "It's a good thing. It would cost the hotel a lot of money."

"Not many people want to climb," he says. "It's too dangerous."

Every so often he cuts a palm branch from a tree and offers to weave the long, narrow leaves into a jungle-style sun hat for a tourist. He charges $2.

Seated on a table top on the white coral sand of Grand Anse beach, he puts the finishing touches to one of his creations.

POVERTY EVIDENT

It takes him 20 minutes, about as long as it takes for a visitor to reach an out-of-the-way luxury hotel away from the poverty evident in the 20-mile taxi ride across the island, from Pearls airport to the resort near the picture-book town of St. George's.

Small, shabby houses and stores dot the sides of the narrow asphalt road that climbs 2,000 feet to a mountain ridge which forms the backbone of the island.

People wait in doorways and along the road for a rickety old bus that will take them to their jobs or shopping in St. George's.

The driver of the eight-year-old cab rarely gets it out of second gear as the road twists and turns through the cool highlands past Grand Etang, a lake nestling in a crater of an extinct volcano.

"No," he says as his car brushes three youngsters on their way to school.

"Surprisingly, not many kids are struck by cars in Grenada. That's probably why they're so carefree. They know it never happens."

PEDESTRIANS IMMUNE

The few sidewalks on the island are in the small towns and pedestrians make little effort to step out of the way of approaching traffic. They seem immune to a car as it barrels down the road from behind.

Grenada—pronounced Grenayda—is a 133-square-mile island, southernmost of the group known as the Windward Islands.

Agriculture—cocoa, nutmegs and bananas are the main exports—is the major industry for the island's 101,000 people. Tourism ranks second.

The "Isle of Spice," where much of the movie Island in the Sun was filmed, attracted 68,745 visitors in 1969, including 3,419 Canadians. In 1960, only 367 Canadians visited here.

The increasing tourist trade partly reflects the work of the Association of Tourist Boards of the Eastern Caribbean, formed in 1967 when several Eastern Caribbean islands decided to promote tourism on a united front.

They come by plane and boat, to do the things tourists do on a small Caribbean island—fish for marlin, dolphin, barracuda or tuna, swim in the blue-green waters of the sea or charter a yacht for a cruise through the islands of the Grenadines.

Pilot's Goof Has 'em Jumpy

AKRON, Ohio (UPI) — An army DC3 landed at Akron municipal airport Friday night with 17 West Point skydivers aboard for an exhibition, but had to take off again.

The pilot thought he had landed in Akron, N.Y. He went to a pay phone at the airport, called New York and found he had been given the wrong flight instructions.

As one of the parachutists got back on the plane he was heard to mutter, "with this kind of navigation I'm glad I'm not on an Apollo flight."

Cape Perpetua on the Oregon Coast

On the bright blue side of our cool, green

Oregon's seacoast is a 400-mile stretch of superlatives. There's something to oooh and aaah about around every turn. Surf battered headlands. Quiet coves and inlets. Wide sandy beaches.

There are quaint coastal towns for lodging, fine dining, shopping, or poking around. The Pacific for swimming, surfing, salmon fishing. Beaches for strolling, sunning, clamming and listening to the ocean roar.

When you visit, you'll find this coastline just one of the reasons our state is called "The Cool, Green Vacationland." Inland a short way are lush valleys, with towns which go out of their way to show visitors a good time. Annual festivals celebrate everything from lumberjacks to Shakespeare.

There are the Cascade, Wallowa, Siskiyou and other mountain ranges, all big on outdoor recreation. And Oregon cities for more sophisticated fun. All over Oregon, accommodations range from modest to posh.

BUT FOR THE HARDY, QUIET ADVENTURES

Harsh Sahara Offers Little for Travellers

By JOHN GALE

NOUAKCHOTT, Mauritania — At night the wind of the Sahara moans in the aluminium sand ladders strapped on the roof of the Land Rover. We are parked by a small thorn tree, the thorns long, white and sharp, and we might be the only men on earth. Even the nomads shun this part of the Spanish Sahara, where the grey sand is harsh grit and the huge sun goes down as though above a strange, primeval sea.

When we first used the ladders under the wheels to get out of deep soft sand, the hollow rungs bent and the wind that night moaned in a different key.

"Like bagpipes, was it?" asked the customs officer of Bir Moghrein, our first stopping place in Mauritania after we had crossed the frontier.

> 'We've lost at least six tourists here in the past two years . . .'

"A bit like bagpipes," we said. "And just as sad."

The customs officer, seated behind a table greeted us gently as we entered his office, a disused bar left by the French; the long bar was still in place, but the customs officer would never use it, for this is the Islamic Republic of Mauritania, and good Muslims do not drink. To meet us he wore khaki uniform and a cap with a black band, and he was not an Arab but a young Negro from the south. His French was immaculate.

He took our word that we had nothing to declare, and talk soon turned to snakes. What sort were there in the desert, and were any not poisonous? The customs officer laughed: "I never heard of a snake that wasn't poisonous."

He doesn't see many people from the outside world, and seems quite pleased to talk. "I like a man that talks. A silent man is defending himself inside a thin shell."

At this point a fat man overflowing a tiny motorbike pops past, his machine squeaking badly on the wavy corrugation of the beaten sandy track. "Why doesn't he go across the smooth sand, when there's so much of it about?" the customs officer says. "I know what a man is like by looking at him. I can tell by his physique. I always trust my intuition."

We put the Land Rover in the wide brown dusty compound behind barbed wire with holes in it near the two-roomed police station and a tall water pump with a wheel revolving in the wind. There is an air of decay.

"Oh, when I retire I shall never try tourism" the police officer had said to us earlier. "Oh, never" and he almost giggled. His face was light brown and semitic, and his dark eyes were wise and sad. He was a supple man and must have been near retirement.

"We've lost at least six tourists here in the past two years," he said. "Several Germans and a Frenchman from Paris in a Volkswagen. He lost himself on the way here from Guelta Zemmur and was never seen again. Or not exactly.

"But they found the car quite soon, and the French Ambassador sold it on the man's behalf to someone of Bir Moghrein, and it is running now."

We saw the Volkswagen next day: it was green and remarkably shiny and it sounded as though it was running on one cylinder.

"He must have left the car before he died and gone up into a rocky place in search of water" the police officer said. "You never know what people will do. Eighteen months later they found his bones. All white. Oh, the Sahara is formidable. You cannot play with the Sahara." — he pronounced it "Zahara" with the accent strong and short on the first a. "Fooo. I shall never try tourism. When I retire I shall stay at home.

"You had better stay here until tomorrow, messieurs, because the prefect who must sign your passports is away until tonight. And it is better that you leave tomorrow with the trucks and not alone. I noticed when you came in here today that your Land Rover was down at the back. Is there something wrong?

"How much does a vehicle like that cost? You are sure you don't want to sell it here? It didn't look quite right to me. Many tourists sell their cars. They leave them here when they break down and cannot be repaired and they are glad to take a plane to Dakar. Many do. Oh, I shall never try tourism. It's not for me."

With water bought dear in Aaiun we scrape the thick yellow dust from our bodies in the compound, watched by small and inquisitive black faces. Suddenly an important emissary, aged 12, comes with a message.

"My friend, the controller of customs, invites you to take mint tea in his house. Whey you are ready I shall show you the way." He is intelligent and cheeky in the manner of Arab boys.

"Good heavens," says Ian Berry, the photographer, owner of our vehicle, "Do you see what I see? What do you think happened to the driver of that?"

There is a faint smell of roasting and a low murmer of voices. There are two rows of mud-sand bricks just pressed and left to dry. We pass through a doorway into a small sandy yard with two healthy young sheep and enter the customs officer's small house. The single room is bare, except for a candle, three mattresses covered with bedouin rugs, and an expensive American short-wave radio, black and shiny, with a tall aerial.

The boy has brought glasses, a kettle and a silver teapot set with red stones, and he produces a tiny blue gas canister with a ring on top. The customs officer enters from the darkness outside wearing a pale blue djellaba and sits upon the mattress at the end and turns on his radio. It is worth at least £180 and is the centrepiece of his bare house. He is a fine-looking man and the whites of his eyes shine in the light of the single candle: Africa.

The radio needs fine tuning, and suddenly an English voice comes up loud and clear, but not quite in the manner of the BBC.

"London?" I ask. "Probably Moscow" says Ian Berry, "or even Prague."

"Moscow I think" the customs officer says. Tuning a short-wave radio is never easy, but he makes it look so, and knows every station.

After time and hissing the mint tea comes up. It is scalding, thick and tastes of tobacco. The boy has forgotten the mint. But it is tea, and we welcome it, and the candle flickers on its engraved brass tray upon the floor, and far-off music comes and goes upon the radio below the customs officers cool black hands.

He is a man from the south, near the border with Senegal and Mali, and does not much speak the dialect of the north, and so is much alone. The boy, French-speaking, is his friend, and he throws his small thick glass to the boy, and it clunks and rolls across the floor, and the boy makes more tea and this time he doesn't forget the mint.

The customs officer tells us how when he was a boy he won a poetry competition and the prize was a year in some college near Biarritz: he liked France, but the pupils of the college were never very free to go where they pleased alone. When he was young the customs officer spent every moment he could in the library of the French Embassy in Nouakchott, the capital, and he is a well-read man. Whatever its colonial record, France educated as Frenchman those who chose to learn.

The candle burns, and Ian Berry says: "Ask him about that other Land Rover, can you?"

"It was sold here by a tourist" says the customs officer. We talk a little of cars, and he says the cult of the vintage car is the cult of the snobbish young.

We can hear the two sheep nudging the wall outside: "They are my companions" the customs officer says, "and I like to caress them at night when I am alone."

"Will you ever eat them?" we ask. "Isn't it difficult to kill an animal when once you have looked it in the eye and have seen what is there? An animal then becomes a cousin. And there is always something there in the eye."

"You mean there is divine grace?" the customs officer says.

"Something like that." We get the idea that he may not eat the sheep.

We talk of ambition, and the customs officer says he has little time for it. He has his house and his job. And he can think in the dark when he is alone at night. And he has his cat, too, and once he had two young fennecs, desert foxes, but they disappeared.

"One must not be too taken with aims" he says. "And one must not look too long in the mirror. One must also not be crushed by possessions. That little camping gas canister is very useful. But you can have too much of gadgets. I have seen films of American housewives in their kitchens. How do they handle all that material? How can they hear for the running of motors? They are dehumanised by their aids.

"I have my small coal fire, and when I blow the embers the fire talks to me: there is a reaction, a give-and-take, a relationship between us. That little gas canister is useful, but there is no interplay between it and me.

"One must not have too much. The great thing is to be here in the night, and to think. When I have had a visitor, I think about his conversation when he has gone, and I learn more from him then than when he was here."

He tries another programe on his radio, and another tall young black man, very like him, comes in, and the customs officer laughs and says what he wants for supper. Then he turns to us again.

"And in life, if you want real madness, it is the stock exchange. All that calling out, those antics, and the hysteria. For what? For nothing. It is purely artificial. A circus of false hope."

He throws his glass to his friend, the little boy, a last glass of mint tea before we go, and the boy picks up the rolling glass, washes it, puts it upon the tray, and prepares the tea. This throwing of the glass to the small boy seems an incongruity in the customs officer: a touch of the pasha almost; perhaps we misunderstand it.

> '. . . several Germans and a Frenchman from Paris in a Volkswagen.'

The customs officer is almost certainly judging us, and in a little when the tea comes up for the last time, he says again: "Yes, I always trust my intuition; the outward sign, the physique, the feel of the man, these are the signs I trust."

"One of my hobbies and satisfactions is to model coins in the candle's wax" the customs officer says. He chuckles as though embarrassed by this admission. "There is beauty in old coins and I study them." He pulls out a thick red tome on numismatics from beside his bed and opens it at random.

The tall young black man reappears with the customs officer's supper concealed between two white plates. We go out under the stars into the small yard where the two sheep move, and the customs officer says that he must not say goodbye to us until we are out in the street.

"I think I shall baptize those sheep on April 1," he says, leaning against the doorway. "I think that is what I shall do." He comes out with us, and we shake hands.

Later, in the far south, we heard that the customs officer spoke excellent English, and had been to Russia, which might explain why he tuned to the English program from Moscow with such ease. Even in Mauritania, one of the world's most deserted countries, you feel the pull of power.

No doubt at night in his house the cutsoms officer thinks of Russia and judges her now that he is no longer there, and sets her against the few men from the West that come with their vehicles through Bir Moghrein.

CHESS MASTER

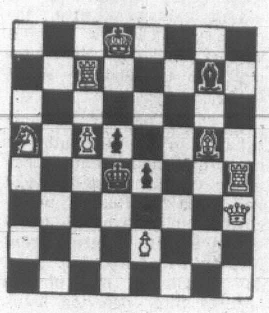
PROBLEM

By Fritz von Wardener, Germany

BLACK: 4



WHITE: 8

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

THE FOURTH NATIONAL OPEN

Games of chance are the magnet that draws people from all over the country to John Ascuaga's Nugget in the Reno suburb of Sparks, Nevada. But it was chess, a game in which chance doesn't have a chance, that brought them there last month for the Fourth National Open.

As the opener for what we can hope and expect to be an annual event in Sparks, it was hard to beat. There were 111 players in it, playing in a huge, beautifully lighted room that could have accommodated many more. As a perennial tournament director, I have never had a more enjoyable job.

It was such a resounding success that for the next three years, the National Open has been scheduled for the same place. Next year it will be played from March 7-12.

Not the least of the pleasant aspects of the Fourth was the strength of the play and a neck-and-neck race that left the winners in doubt up to the end. Then Grandmasters Arthur Bisguier and Larry Evans emerged at the front of the pack, with seven points out of a possible eight. They were followed by Grandmaster Walter Brown of Australia and Dr. Ariel Mengarini of New York, each only a half point away from the winners.

Bisguier was in fine form and played dangerous chess straight through to the seventh round. There, against Texan Kenneth Smith, he was caught napping and came perilously close to losing. Only a tremendous "save" in a desperate situation gave him the game. It was an almost impossible win. Here it is:

CUSO Teachers Attacked by African Students

By LEWIS LEVENDEHL

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (CP) — For some Canadian University Service Overseas volunteers, it can be a most painful experience that Canadians are sometimes confused with Americans.

Peter Obryshko, a 27-year-old teacher from Prosperity, Alta., northeast of Edmonton, was attacked by African students while walking with a United States Peace Corps volunteer.

The two men were confronted on the campus of an Addis Ababa junior secondary school by six to eight students shouting "Yankee imperialists" and "Go home, we don't need you."

The students took off their shoes and pounded the teachers, Obryshko said. The American suffered a broken jaw and finger and Obryshko ended up with "several bruises" and a lost watch and sweater.

The fight was reported to the police but he said no action was taken.

SCHOOLS CLOSE DOWN

Chaotic government-student relations in the East African monarchy had resulted in closure of schools for more than half the time he had been in Ethiopia. He arrived in September, 1968, and left in March this year.

In an interview prior to his departure from Addis Ababa, the bachelor teacher of English and social studies said the students are dissatisfied with Ethiopian society and the system of government.

"Strong anti-American feelings are expressed because U.S. foreign aid is supporting Haile Selassie's government which the students vehemently dislike," he said.

"They believe Peace Corps volunteers are all Central Intelligence or military agents." The Corps had only six volunteers left in the country by January and were not sending over any more.

Government-student clashes in Addis Ababa had resulted in numerous student deaths. Foreign teachers were told by the Ethiopian government "to stay out of it."

STUDENTS KILLED

On Dec. 28 last year, Obryshko said, he heard 10 minutes of solid and 10 of intermittent shooting about one-quarter mile from where he lives.

According to what he heard from people who were at the university, police and the emperor's bodyguard entered the campus and charged the students with fixed bayonets.

They chased the students around the campus and shot at them. Seven were reported killed.

Obryshko had harsh words for Western governments "supporting a reactionary regime supposedly in the defence of liberty."

"Here is terribly tight censorship . . . rampant disease, beggars everywhere, civil war in the north with the Eritreans, border clashes with Somalia and tribal disputes throughout this poor country."

Returning to Canada via Asia, he said that as a person he had benefitted from his African experience although he was not fully utilized due to the school closures, either by government action or student strikes.

'His Work Will Carry Right On'

A Labor of Love and Philosophy Saves Tragic Children of Centre

By JACK SCOTT

It may seem just another staff change in a social service where change is a frequent occurrence. But for 80 or more young British Columbians the news today will have a deeper meaning.

Jim Mair is leaving Sevenoaks.

His "graduates," many of them Victoria youngsters, all of them at one time on a probable collision course with mental hospitals or imprisonment, have, in most cases, found meaningful roles in society. They're testimony to seven years of trial-and-error, bold experiment and a lot of love.

"A very significant achievement with results that will flow back into the whole program of child care."

That was the estimate of Gordon R. Wright, executive director of Victoria's Family and Children's Service, in confirming the reluctant acceptance of James B. Mair's resignation as director of the Sevenoaks Children's Centre.

For 40-year-old Jim Mair, a husky, pipe-smoking, volatile man whose own credo is summarized in his advice to young social workers — "to be an effective therapist is to be a continual learner" — the move from Victoria and the pleasant hillside treatment community on the slope of Mount Douglas is "an emotional trauma, but a need to search for something different."

Sevenoaks' reputation as a pioneering refuge for the rescue of emotionally troubled children has already brought Mair several challenging offers when he leaves Victoria on Aug. 15. He's most likely to accept a university appointment in Eastern Canada.

"This is a very exhausting kind of work and I've put a tremendous amount into it," Mair reflected. "Perhaps at this stage of my life there's more in it if I teach for the next four or five years and finish off my formal education to the doctorate level rather than continue as administrator of a specific program.

"It's a decision easier to make now than it would have been three or four years ago. We've attracted people who are strong leaders and deeply committed. We've matured professionally. Sevenoaks is no longer a kind of monastery built around a father figure. It will stand on its own."

Officials of the Family and Children's Service aren't so certain that a successor of Mair's stature will be easy to find to head Sevenoaks' 30-man staff, but executive director Wright says, "We want the same kind of dedicated man, someone like Jim who's had experience on the firing line that leads to good administration.

"Jim, himself, has made a major contribution to the whole program of family service. His work will carry right on."

It wasn't always that way. When Mair took over in February of 1963 there were just 14 youngsters at the centre. There had been upheavals in administration. Staff morale was low. Treatment techniques were varied.

A staff worker there remembers: "When Jim arrived they were putting in shatterproof glass in the buildings to keep the kids from smashing the windows."

It was understandable on that particular firing line.

The Sevenoaks kind of child has been described as the most difficult of all to treat successfully, Children with the ability to function normally, they've been emotionally crippled by early experience, generally in the home.

Some are over-active — "prone to vigorous delinquency," as the social workers' jargon has it. Some are withdrawn, headed for adult mental illness. Almost always they're suspicious, hard to reach.

'No hard and fast rules . . . if it doesn't make sense we challenge it'

"They are kids," in Mair's characteristic words, "who have had a pretty lousy start in life, kids who tend to see things in a trapped sort of way."

Mair's challenge was not merely to begin the building of a competent, dedicated team, but to evolve his own theories of effective treatment, then considered unorthodox and experimental. In both roles he seemed, at times, as a friend describes him, "a one-man band."

"Yes, that was true then," Mair agrees. "I built the place around me with a kind of charismatic leadership that seemed necessary, but could never work in the long run. Even three years ago my leaving this place might have meant it would go under.

"Now we've arrived at a clear direction in our style of treatment and the people to carry it out. We've therapists here who are better than I could be, people who've a rapport and respect for each other. We're able to look after 30 youngsters and it is continuing to develop."

How much of that style of treatment, once thought to be heretical, now generally followed in such centres, evolved from Mair's own background? Its a subject of endless speculation by those who have worked with him.

Mair himself recalls his days as a longshoring school drop-out — "I messed it up properly" — and the influence of a father he remembers as "a good, liberal, Puritan man who was always for the underdog" as motivation for his interest in young people.

Jim McConnell, executive director of the Victoria YMCA, was one of those who paved the way for Mair to enter Sir George Williams University in Montreal though he lacked the academic qualifications.

"I first saw Jim in a 'Y' leadership camp in Prince Edward Island — the place, incidentally where he met his wife, Laura," McConnell recalls. "He was only a teenager himself, then, but the way he could reach youngsters was phenomenal. It was easy to see where his life's work would take him."

In a conversation some years ago Mair described his approach to troubled children simply as "living, working and playing with youngsters in the hope that you can help them to handle their feelings."

Recently, gazing through his office window at a solitary boy gravely pedalling a bike about Sevenoaks' estate-like grounds, Mair confessed, "If the truth were known I didn't know what I was doing when it began," and went on to spell out a philosophy that might offer guide-lines for any adult dealing with any child.

"Our first task is to create an environment that frees the kid, not in a permissive way, but to allow him to deal with what scares him," he explained.

"He needs to gather into himself the kind of relationships and experiences that enable him to trust himself again and to experiment more widely with the world. You have to create a kind of living space for these youngsters where they'll be well cared for, where they'll feel their basic needs are met, where there's room for them to make mistakes without feeling that they'll be destroyed.

"There are no hard and fast rules. We keep trying to find out what makes sense. If it doesn't make sense we challenge it.

"Most youngsters who come here have had profound shocks to their learning system," he went on. "They may be aggressive or withdrawn and this, in turn, makes the world respond in certain ways.

"Teachers, for example, may become hostile. The child is caught in an ambivalence. He needs authority because without it he may not know where he is. Often he will attempt to force authority into being punitive and harsh; force you, in other words, to fit his perception. He is saying, 'It is better to know that he will beat me than not to know what he will do'."

Mair is less concerned with how the child developed this way than he is with finding methods — any methods — that will expand the child's narrow view.

He readily admits that his own approach has changed over the years.

"I'm harder now on kids than I was in the beginning," he said. "I see now that its important not to simply provide an all-absorbing, all-giving environment. The child needs to know how to negotiate the law of the street in which he's living. A lot of the world is harsh. A lot of the world is punitive. It makes crippling demands.

"Three or four years ago I'd have been much more protective against the harshness of society on the basis that the child had already had enough. Now I'm more inclined to say, 'I'll stand alongside you and help you interpret it, but it's going to be your cross, mister, not mine.' I can't carry his problem. I can only help him carry it. Three or four years ago I might have done this" — Mair opens his brown corduroy jacket like a protective wing — "and told a youngster, yes, isn't it a rotten world and Big Daddy will protect you. Now I say, 'Let's learn together what its all about'."

Like most social workers in his field Mair vacillates between optimism and pessimism.

"We're dealing, you see, with what may seem a bottomless pit," he reflected, pessimistically. "Where does the need end? Right here in Victoria there's a tremendous amount to be done. There are many more children that Sevenoaks could be serving. We're hampered because we can't recruit and train enough people who either want this kind of demanding job or know how to do it."

But, then, optimistically: "On the other hand, the services for the disturbed child have doubled in this province and in Victoria since 1964. We're more realistic and selective about our program now than we were in the beginning.

"We used to pretend that we provided a service for every kind of disturbed child. We are successful with a certain kind of youngster and determined not to be unsuccessful with another kind."

Students Shouldn't Pass Up Any Job Chance—Businessman

He was commenting on a report by youth activities director Walter Donald reiterating that the student employment picture this year appears much darker than usual. A previous report on his behalf indicated the demand for jobs far outweighs the supply.

At a directors' meeting Friday it was suggested that although some part time or low-paying jobs do come up, students frequently refuse to take them because they don't offer enough money to pay for fees, books and accommodation in the forthcoming year at university.

"We've got to get it into the student camp that an employer is not going to hire when he doesn't need help, and for goodness sake to take casual work offers when they get them. Some money is better than none," Holmes said.

A director said students from University of Victoria need work now, whereas many employers don't require bigger staff until the tourist season starts.

Donald said a Uvic survey team worked its way through the telephone directory, asking businessmen if they will be hiring a student this summer.

"The answer was predominatly 'no', or else they said they had already committed themselves to hiring help," Donald said.

From the Uvic student standpoint, there will be 1,800 job applicants this season, while at present it appears there will be openings for 500, leaving 1,300 prospective unemployed.

To some it means the difference between attending university next session, or dropping out.

The high schools are doing a survey now to gauge demand for casual workers. They are being co-ordinated by Youth Employment Service, assisted by Canada Manpower, and are cataloguing gardening, cleanup and other temporary jobs.

Two-Tone Station Wagon Sought by Fire Probers

Fire Chief Eric Simmons said today he believes a man deliberately set fire to a Bay Street apartment block early Friday, endangering the lives of 50 people and causing an estimated $100,000 damage.

The chief said a man was seen leaving the four-storey 23-suite block at 1145 Bay Street just about the time the fire alarm went off.

"He was observed for a moment to sit down in a two-tone station wagon and then to leave in a hurry," the chief said.

Simmons attributed the fire to an arsonist because the blaze was started in the elevator which was stopped at the second floor.

The fire burned through the floor of the elevator car before roaring up the elevator shaft to the roof where it began to spread.

NO DEFECTS

"We found no evidence of mechanical or electrical defects with the elevator," he said.

Extensive damage from smoke and heat was caused in a house fire at 2414 Millstream Friday night, Langford Fire Chief, Al LeQuesne said.

The owner of the house, Stephen Jossul, was not at home when the alarm was turned in at 7:15 p.m.

The chief said he believes the fire started on the porch and spread to the bathroom. An investigation is under way.

Colwood RCMP say a fire of unknown origin Friday morning destroyed a summer cottage on the top of the Malahat highway's Tunnel Hill section. The fire started about the same time Friday as the Bay Street blaze.

Meanwhile, in Victoria Friday, coroner Edmund Jorre de St. Jorre ruled that the death of an 80-year-old woman in a fire Thursday morning was accidental.

Funeral services for Mrs. Cavanaugh will be held in Sands Memorial Chapel of Chimes on Monday at 10 a.m.

NERVE GAS PROTEST CERTAIN

Students to Map Strategy

Students from the Institute of Adult Studies will announce Monday how they plan to protest shipments of nerve gas through Juan de Fuca Strait.

Robert Munro, a spokesman, said today students participating in Operation Nerve Gas will meet over the weekend to decide on a plan of action.

Munro said one suggestion has been to hold a rally in Beacon Hill Park next Thursday or Friday and to invite officials such as members of the city council and the American consul to attend.

There is another suggestion to hold a demonstration at the Black Ball Ferry terminal on Wharf Street.

Munro said groups such as Voice of Women, SPEC and students at the University of Victoria will be informed so they can take part in the activities.

The U.S. Army has not announced a shipment date for three lethal gases from Okinawa to Bangor, Wash., and on to Hermiston, Ore.

Arthur Mayse . . .

IF APOLLO 13'S MISSION had gone according to plan, the earthbound would have taken landing and return pretty much for granted. For with repetition, even the fantastic becomes less compelling. Another successful moon shot, flawless technology aiding? . . . So what else is new in the galaxy!

An aborted mission fouled up by technological failure was something else again. It humanized space.

The astronauts become men confronted by crisis and burdened with man's ancient dilemma: how to even the odds against survival with the tools available.

It's true that technology hadn't failed them entirely. Also, they had such direction as computerized science could give then from earth. But here was a problem in human terms — three of our own in grave danger — and it affected us as a precisely machined operation could never have done.

Had the descent been routine, a crowd would still have watched the screens in New York's Grand Central station. But the crowd, I suggest, would have been smaller. And the faces, as Odyssey bobbed in the Pacific with stabilizing balloons atop like Mickey-Mouse ears, wouldn't have advertised emotion so openly.

Certainly this earthling would have been less interested. As it was, I went off growling at circumstance on Friday morning to address some junior high students.

Better if they, and I, were rooting for man at a climax of adventure.

"They're watching television" the school librarian told me when I checked in. Then, with the merest hint of a question in his tone, "I suppose we'd better break that up."

The hint was enough. We didn't break it up. Instead, I made it home in time to see the triumphant end of a failure more significant in human terms than success.

LAST SEPTEMBER WITHout waiting to be called in, I put my car through the motor vehicle testing station and drove off with a red sticker on the windshield.

That was that, I thought, until September rolled round again.

This week a letter from the Motor Vehicle branch turned up in my mail. My car would be banned from the blacktop as of April 30 unless it had acquired a valid testing station sticker for its windshield by that date.

Typed at the bottom of this form sheet was a paragraph stating that if the required seal of approval was already in place, all I need do was supply the testing station with the certificate number.

This is doubletalk. It is also stupidity. And further, it suggests that this particular arm of government isn't keeping its right hand informed of what its left hand doeth.

When a car has successfully run the testing station gauntlet, it is mere rudimentary bookkeeping that notice of the fact should go into the headquarters files.

If this isn't being done — and if it is, why these redundant warnings to ruffled red-stickered citizens? — the branch should lose no time in amending its procedure.

A CALL THIS WEEK from a mother, registered nurse by profession, whose daughter is enrolled in a baby-sitting course laid on by Saanich fire department.

"The department is doing a wonderful job," the RN said. "I thought I knew all about the care and safeguarding of small children. But my daughter is learning details that opened my eyes."

On the strength of this recommendation, I checked with a department which has seized smartly on one way to increase safety in the home.

There are 50 students in the present baby-sitters' seminar, which meets from 7 to 9 p.m. each Monday evening in Reynolds senior secondary. Boys as well as girls have been taking the eight-lesson course, and I understand that at least one grandma also attends.

I can also report that young Snooks, the RN's daughter, was greatly impressed when one of the firemen brought a real live baby from his home for demonstration. This rates as devotion beyond the call of duty.

Doing The Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

These dresses graduate cum laude . . .

One of the really important days in a girl's life is her graduation . . . and if this important occasion is coming up next month for you (or your daughter) . . . it isn't a minute too soon to start shopping for that very special graduation dress . . . As a matter of fact, that's exactly what a lot of girls are doing right now at Miss Frith's . . . you see them preening in front of the mirrors on the mezzanine floor . . . looking good enough to eat in one or other of the lovely dresses from a collection that's simply staggering in its variety! . . . We were looking thorugh the graduation dresses the other day and were charmed with the flower garden of colors . . . the soft, feminine fabrics . . . and styles ranging from the sweetly demure to the subtly sophisticated . . . This year emphasis is on sleeves . . . There's a lilac chiffon with butterfly sleeves . . . a pale pink peau d'ange with the new little puffed sleeves . . . an apricot chiffon with ruffled neck and full sleeves ending in deep cuffs . . . . A heavenly tucked pink linen sleeveless dress with white embroidery bands around waist and neck . . . We just hope this will whet your appetite to go browsing among Miss Frith's graduation dresses! . . . Miss Frith Millinery and Fashions, 1617 Douglas St., 383-7181.

In Britain there's a move to persuade women to switch to disposable clothing.

Elegant clothes with the Viennese flair . . .

If you're looking for something really different and distinctive in clothes . . . and we're not referring now to way-out styles or eccentric skirt lengths . . . do visit Wilson's and ask them to show you the wool lace dresses and suits which have just arrived from Vienna . . . The label says "Modenia". . . and these lovely, lovely clothes are now being made especially for Wilson's . . . . We call it wool lace, for want of a better name . . . but it's really wool (or silk) braid swirling around and forming designs on a net backing . . . Styles are simple, but the total effect is very elegant . . . One suit, in shades of beige or turquoise . . . has Chanel jacket and matching silk blouse bowed at the back . . . ruffled cuffs peeping beneath the jacket sleeves . . . Another suit is eggshell color, buttoned high to the neck . . . A beige and curry coat dress with flat gilt buttons down the front, would look marvellous worn under a mink stole . . . There are short-sleeved dresses in emerald and lavender . . . with tiny steel beads outlining neck and waistline . . . and an adorable off-white cocktail dress patterned with daisies with gold centres . . . A perfect summer suit (size 16) is the color of hazel nuts . . . silk braid worked in a basketweave design . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

Furrier Jacques Kaplan has designed a fur-lined tunnel . . . for the tired (and well-heeled) businssman to relax in.

Original creations in an unusual medium . . .

When you think of an artist's tools you usually visualize brush or chisel . . . but a welder's blow torch . . . in the skilful hands of a young Quebecer, Allan Ryan . . accomplishes some quite amazing things! . . . We're referring now to the delightful figures, candle boxes, bookends, etc., made of copper, brass and iron . . . which we saw at the Handloom earlier this week . . . Real "fun" things which quicken the imagination . . . and bear the authentic stamp of a true artist! . . . Makes you feel good just to look at them! . . . Figures include "The Juggler" and "The Accordion Player". . . clowns with droll faces, knobby knees and elbows . . . Iron Knights . . . fighting Viking figures, mounted on blocks of pine . . . also flank a pair of bookends heavy enough to hold a couple of encyclopedias (and absolouately "skid-proof") . . . There's a flight of birds . . . distilled motion, if ever we saw it . . . Charming brass or copper flowers on long, flexible stems, anchored into black pine blocks . . . Candle boxes in brass and pine, and iron and pine . . . A hinged what-not box, and a small cigarette box . . . Quite frankly, we've never before seen anything like these Allan Ryan creations . . . Every one is a conversation piece . . . a happy thing to bring into your home . . . The Handloom, 18 Centennial Square, 384-1011, and Empress Hotel, 384-1518.

Standard's Import Shop has expanded . . .

We got the surprise of our life when we walked into Standard Furniture this week and saw what's been going on! . . . Standard . . . who are forever telling people to refurnish and revitalize their homes . . . have taken their own advice . . . New paint, new carpets, new floor tiles . . . everything brighter, cleaner and displayed to much better advantage . . . The Import Shop now occupies a good third of the main floor, having expanded into the space formerly occupied by TVs and appliances (which have moved down to the lower main) . . . You can really see the beautiful Danish furniture now! Even bedroom suites are on display! . . . Another thing we approve of is the way complete table settinges of china, stainless steel flatware, crystal and linens are all individually set up along long, wide shelves in the Import Shop . . . Makes it easy for you to choose the perfect go-togethers . . . You can see everything better now . . . Noticed some new German cookware in heavy steel, bright with blue or green enamel with an interesting pattern . . . Mixing bowls, kettles, etc. . . . and the pans have lids which really fit tightly . . . Some darling baby sets consisting of bowl, plate and mug . . . decorated with scenes from European fairy tales . . . Too much to tell you about here, but go see for yourself! . . . Standard Furniture Co., 737 Yates St., 382-5111.

Delightful new toppers from Bleyle . . .

New Bleyle pullovers of texturized polyester have just recently arrived at Impacts 'n' Imports . . . and we think they're particularly smart with their diagonal stripes of green or navy on white . . . white ribbed band around neck and cuffs . . . Very slimming, and smart toppers for slacks, skirts or Bermudas . . . Numbers of these are limited, so if you'd like one, don't wait too long! . . . Also from Bleyle . . . V-neck collarless jackets, with green or navy stripes . . . but this time, vertical stripes . . . to team up with solid color polyester pants or skirt, and a plain helanca blouse . . . Speaking of these blouses, Impacts 'n' Imports now have some new ones with three-quarter sleeves . . . in every conceivable color (6 shades of green alone, so this gives you some idea!) . . . Thre are plain ones and striped ones . . . horizontals, verticals and diagonals . . . Also a good selection of sleevelss helancas . . . MARTHA LOGAN

She's Getting Younger All the Time

By ELINOR LEE

WASHINGTON (WP) — There comes a time in every woman's life when a new face would be most welcome.

But getting rid of crows' feet and wrinkles takes time and money, and often surgery.

With no plastic surgery, no visits to beauty spas and no hokus pokus, Martha Logan has had three new faces in the last 24 years.

Her newest face, unveiled in Chicago, is the image of a young homemaker with a new hair-do. She looks younger now than in 1946.

The new stylized portrait of Martha Logan, well known corporate symbol for Swift and Company's home economists, is intended to symbolize the modern character of the company and its approach to the consumer, explained Robert W. Reneker, president of Swift and Co.

"Use of the new portrait will begin immediately," he said at the unveiling, "although it may take as long as a year to complete the change-over because of the time required to re-design some packages."

The Martha Logan portrait appears on many of the company's product packages, in advertising and on all educational materials and publications prepared for schools, consumer and the news media.

Characteristics most frequently noted were:

- A married woman, about 28 years of age, with several children so that she is able to understand the needs of a growing family.
- A woman with a college degree in home economics but with a broad, liberal arts background.
- A woman with a warm, friendly personality, but one who can speak with authority.
- A woman oriented to the realities of feeding a family, who can prepare hurry-up meals on a limited budget as well as fancy dinners for company or the boss.

"To thses characteristics we added our own image of a home economist as the consumer's representative to management — one of the most important roles played by the Martha Logan staff in our marketing program," stated president Reneke.

Preliminary sketches were given critical review by consumers before final selection was made by the company.

Martha In 1946 . . .

This portrait will replace the one in use since 1957 which in turn replaced the 1946 portrait, the first to be unveiled.

Long before Martha had a face, she was a familiar name to homemakers. The first advertisement carrying the Martha Logan name appeared in McCall's Magazine in Sept., 1933. Even before the name appeared, Swift had hired a home economist, Irene Hume Taylor, in 1918.

Over the years there have been more than 150 Martha Logans. Today there are eight in the United States and one in Canada, working under the direction of Jeanne Paris who joined the comapny in 1955, and has headed the home economics department since 1957. The Martha Logan test kitchens are located in Swift's research and development centre in Oakbrook, a Chicago suburb.

"Why the name Martha Logan?" we asked Miss Paris in a telephone interview.

"Because it's easy to remember, easy to spell and pronounce, and because Martha was, and is, a popular name," she replied.

Horticultural Failure Costs a Fortune

By SHIRLEY CONRAN
From London

Being in my garden is like being in the Foreign Legion; you either survive or die.

The sign of spring dawning —means that it is time for my annual horticultural effort.

I work regularly in the garden for five hours, twice a year.

I used to think of it as a back yard until I went to New York and realized that by their standards I was in real estate.

Not only did I have a verandah (unsafe), a balcony (big enough for two really close friends) and a patio (eight paving stones outside the back door) but beyond the patio lay a patch of real earth filled with those pretty pink things that grew on bomb sites, and the fattest dandelions in Camden Town.

Once hooked on horticulture, I trotted off to the local nursery, spent a fortune, and quickly realised that I had black fingers: everything I planted withered and died as if seared with a blowtorch.

So I telephoned an expert, who asked what my soil was. I said that below a thin layer of topsoil the substrátum was mainly stones, bits of lead pipe and the odd ARP helmet. 'Ah, then it will be acid.

When he turned up — a tall, elegant fair aesthete called Alfred — we drew a marvellous plan, carefully worked out according to small garden logic, and he wrote flowery Latin names on the flowerbeds in exquisite calligraphy.

After I had paid Alfred's huge bill (new earth costs the earth) the rains came and transformed the garden into an inefficient swimming-pool.

So I found another expert. She was a large, white-haired lady who talked non-stop for two hours about her divorce and then said that I should grow lilies.

Instead I took steps to find out what I could personally grow in no time, with no time and absolutely no natural inclination.

I surveyed the surrounding gardens, noted those which seemed to contain owners permanently bent double, and decided to ignore them.

I then trotted along to make the acquaintance of the owners of fairly pleasant, tidy gardens who were never seen in them unless lying in a deckchair. Their recommendations were grass, ivy, hydrangeas, Christmas trees.

I bought two Christmas trees for the front-door tubs, and three for the patio.

I trained ivy to trail from the window-boxes on the verandah down into the patio beneath and, given another 100 years or so, might reach it.

For around £3 I buy 9 lbs. of shade grass every year, resowing each April. It is hardly the stuff that bowling-greens are nurtured on, but it is the right color and provides an interesting assortment of short greenery.

Procedure is simpoe. I remove the leaves discarded by the neighbouring trees, viciously rake up the lawn, scatter seed all over and water well. The patch looks messy for a few days, then springs miraculously to life. Eureka.

Every April also I fill my home with luxuriant pink hydrangeas. When at the end of summer they have died back I plant them in a growing semi-circle round the garden walls and the next year they generally blossom uninhibitedly.

In summer, before cooking supper, if they look a bit shrivelled and parched, I water them with a hose from the second-floor kitchen window; this takes no time at all and makes me feel splendidly omnipotent.

I realise that experts may be sceptical about my past success in transferring house plants to the garden, but it may have been that because my home was so cold they flourished in the warmth outside.

Now that I have central heating the indoor hydrangeas demand more attention and I am compelled to stand them in the bidet every morning so that they can have a good soak.

Soon I shall be out in the garden to chop off the withered heads. Then they grow again. They go in pink and they come out blue. It may not be gardening, but it is magic.

Poinconneuses Disappearing As Automation Takes Over

PARIS (AP) — A master of ceremonies on a French radio show asked a girl what she wanted to be when she grew up.

"A poinconneuse," she said.

The MC screamed and the studio audience went into hysterics.

When everyone was calm again, the MC apologized to the girl and to all the off-duty poinconneuses listening, but said he was sorry to ruin the child's career plans; by the time she was of age all the poinconneuses would likely be gone.

No more poinconneuses? That would be like doing away with concierges. But just as the business of being the mother figure of an apartment house is dying out, so is the era of the poinconneuse, the lady who sits in the subway 7½ hours a day and does nothing, absolutely nothing, but punch round holes in oblong tickets.

Poinconneuse means puncher. The job ranks in the French mind as the epitome of proletarian drudgery. There are poinconneuse jokes and poinconneuse cartoons.

They go to work as early as 5:20 a.m., settling in for the day, sometimes in slippers and sometimes with a raggedy sweater thrown over their shoulders.

Mounds of confetti—green for first-class tickets, brown for second—rise at their feet. A poinconneuse is not supposed to read or knit, but many do at slow stations.

A day of hole-punching, plus closing a little door when there is a train in the station, brings 830-930 francs, or a maximum of $179 a month, to the some 3,000 poinconneuses.

Now, the subway authority says it sees automation coming and the poinconneuses will be phased out over a period of 10 years.

Cross-Country Cavalcade

coffin-toting cavalcade composed of members of the Women's Liberation Movement from across the country leaves here April 27 for Ottawa.

The purpose of the cavalcade, local organizers said Thursday, is to draw attention to the number of deaths every year from "backroom abortions," and to promote a campaign to have abortion laws liberalized.

About 25 members of the Vancouver Women's Caucus will launch the project, leaving the city courthouse at noon and stopping in Kamloops the first night, Calgary the second, then Edmonton, Saskatoon, Regina, Winnipeg, Thunder Bay, Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury, and Toronto, where they will spend two days. They will tow the coffin behind a van and will travel in cars and chartered buses.

Meetings and radio and television interviews have been organized in cities en route, and more women will join the group as it progresses across the country.

The women expect to arrive in Ottawa May 9 and hope to meet Prime Minister Trudeau and Health Minister John Munro.

DEAR ABBY . . .

Minister Objects

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My fiancee, Debbie, is ready to call it off with me over a point that seems so trivial that it's unbelievable.

Debbie has always wanted to be married in the church her family has belonged to for generations. This was fine with me until about a year ago when the minister of this church (a man my fiancee greatly admires and respects) advised her to break up with me. She took his advice, and we didn't see each other for several months, but were miserable without each other and went back together again.

It took some real salesmanship on my part to get Debbie back, but soon after we became engaged.

Our relationship since then has been better than ever, except for one problem. I do not want to be married by that minister. I feel perfectly justified in feeling as I do.

I love this girl and don't want to lose her again, but I cannot see myself being married by a man who clearly disapproves of me. What do you say? George.

DEAR GEORGE: You're not marrying the minister, it's Debbie you want. If she insists on being married by that minister in the church to which her family has belonged for generations, it's understandable, so don't fight it. But remind Debbie that after the ceremony, her first loyalty is to you, and all others, including the minister, shall stay in the wings.

DEAR ABBY: I work during the day and have only the evenings and weekends to do my cleaning, cooking, washing and ironing, etc. (Thank goodness, no kids yet.)

My husband comes home, plops himself in front of the TV while I bring him his supper. (I eat alone in the kitchen.)

I start to do some housework and he whines, "Why don't you come and watch TV with me? I'm lonesome." So if I go watch TV with him, the next thing I know he is nagging me because I am always behind with my laundry and he is short on socks and shirts and underwear, and that the place always looks so sloppy he's ashamed to have any friends over.

I am getting sick of the whole routine. What do you suggest? Confused In Maine.

DEAR CONFUSED: If your husband wants your company, why do you serve him in front of the TV and eat alone in the kitchen? Since you both work during the daytime, and you need your evenings to get your housework done, tell your husband that you will be glad to keep him company while he relaxes after he helps you with some of your household chores.

DEAR ABBY: If Cinderella had been wearing the shoes that are fashionable today, Prince Charming would have laughed himself to death when he found her shoe. And I'm sure he wouldn't have gone looking for her.

I order my good looking, high heeled, pointy-toed shoes from a special store in Washington, D.C. I simply order a little larger size and I suffer less.— Rebel In Texas.

CONFIDENTIAL TO DOTTY AND MAC: Yes, two can live as cheaply as one — if they both have good jobs.

What's your problem? You'll feel better if you get it off your chest. Write to ABBY, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. For a personal reply enclose stamped, addressed envelope.

BARGAIN BOUTIQUE OPENING SOON

There's no time for loafing at the Winnifred M. Clark Centre, 1450 Elford Street, as trainees, staff members and volunteers for the Greater Victoria Association for the Retarded prepare for the grand opening of Elford Bargain Boutique. The boutique will be open every Friday, beginning April 24, from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Stock will include Elford crafts, home-baking, good used clothing, shoes, books, records, household utensils and even a kitchen sink. Among the many workers now putting the finishing touches on the boutique are (from left) Fred Smith, E. S. Linkletter and Paul Gettle, while Rita Stringer (with sweater) and Phoebe Holt sort merchandise. As well as providing extra funds for the operation of the Centre (a sheltered workshop for mentally handicapped adults), the boutique will give trainees practical experience in sorting, mending, cleaning, pressing, labelling and ticketing the goods donated to them for sale.

UCF Group Marks Silver Anniversary

Major-General and Mrs. G. R. Pearkes will be special guests Wednesday when the Sidney Group of the Save the Children Fund commemorates its 25th anniversary with a silver celebration tea.

The tea will be held in the Margaret Vaughn-Birch Hall, Sidney. Maj.-Gen. Pearkes will officially open the affair, which will include a display of work, at 2:45 p.m.

The group was formed in 1945 when the war's end also brought an end to the Red Cross' demand for sewing.

When first formed the SCF group had seven members, led by Mrs. J. N. Bray who now lives in Victoria. There are now 34 members, of whom four, Mrs. F. Baker, Mrs. J. Ruxton, Mrs. H. W. Wilders and Mrs. W. E. Poupore, joined in 1945.

As well as sending financial aid and gifts, the Sidney SCF members became friends with the children they helped. The youngsters sponsored in 1945 still correspond with their benefactors, sending pictures of their own children.

Other work done by the group includes making quilts, children's garments and ditty bags with toys and toiletries for hospitalized Eskimo children and a helping during local emergencies.

The tea is open to the public and any money raised will be used to carry on this work.

What's New at Eatons

Amidst unisex looks, pant suits and kooky fashion fads — it's reassuring to know nurses still look like nurses. Starched, white, her skirts swishing efficiently as she makes her rounds on silent white shoes, the nurse is a pillar of sanity in an otherwise mad, mad world.

The Women-in-White mystique is heightened by just how she manages to keep so immaculate . . . have you ever seen a nurse with a run in her nylons, have you ever seen her when her uniform wasn't spotless? Science, which has added new responsibilities to her job has also added convenience to her off-hours. Imagine what a boon synthetic fabrics have been to her. Fabrics that shed soil, moisture and creases . . . fabrics that swish through suds and drip-dry through one shift ready-to-wear for the next. Just like the LaCross uniform illustrated:

A cool blend of 80% Dacron with 20% cotton, closes with a zip front, roomy pockets shaped to the flare of the skirt, action-sleeves for freedom of movement, 16.00 each. Just one from a collection of uniforms in sizes 8 to 50, prices from 9.00 to 22.00.

This generation of grads get to throw away their caps. Honest. They are called "Disposo-Caps" and they are made of paper with a linen-like texture that looks for all the world like the real thing. Life-span: from three weeks to three months. Care: light dirt and smudges disappear with an art gum eraser. Especially useful for nurses on duty in isolation wards. Economical, too, you get 3 caps for 1.39, white closing studs included.

Uniforms, Floor of Fashion

The Nurse-Mystique concerns her smile, too . . . and nobody, but nobody, is going to smile with sincerity when her feet hurt. That's why here at Eaton's we stock nurses' shoes with a reputation for glove-like fit, comfort from one end of an 8-hour shift to the other—renowned names like: 'Gold Cross' Nurses' Oxfords of white elk (trade name) leather with flexible leather soles, "Arch Tone" (cushioned arch) insoles. Walking heels. Pair 19.00.

COMPANY BIRTHDAY

Film Party Honors Aged

Victoria's senior citizens are invited to a film party in the Royal Theatre Monday, April 27, starting at 9:45 a.m.

It will be free to all persons of 65 and over. The film musical, Carousel, starring Gordon McRae and Shirley Jones, will be shown and various prizes will be presented by Mayor Hugh Curtis of Saanich.

Top prize is a free holiday for two at the Island Hall Hotel, Parksville.

ADVANCE TICKETS

To attend the party senior citizens must obtain advance free tickets at the Royal, Capitol or Tillicum Drive-in theatres.

The party is being held in connection with the 50th anniversary of Famous Players Canadian Corporation. Similar celebrations will be held across Canada, starting Monday, April 26.

"For some years, we have operated the Famous Players Golden Age Club," said Martin Cave, manager of the Royal. "Persons of 65 and over are admitted to our regular shows at 50 cents in the afternoon and one dollar at night.

"They register at the theatre and are given a special admission ticket. The party on April 27 is an extension of this idea."

In virtually all Famous Theatres across Canada, the price for all seats will be pegged at 50 cents on Monday, April 20.

In Toronto, president George P. Destounks announced the corporation will make an annual grant of $10,000 for six awards to university and high school students producing the year's best 16 millimetre and 8 millimetre films in English and French.

It will award the top university film makers first and second prizes worth $2,500 and $1,750 for 16 mm productions and first prizes of $750 at high school level for 16 or 8 mm films.

First awards will be made before the end of 1970 and the winning 16 mm. films will be shown in as many Famous Players theatres as possible.

CREATIVE INCENTIVE

"By providing creative incentive at scholastic levels, we believe we will be contributing to the growth of this feature industry," Destounis said.

He deplores the amount of sex and violence in today's films and refers to them as "a crisis" for his company and exhibitors generally.

"The truth is, producers will stop making these films only when the public stops buying them. The present situation is a vicious circle. Moviegoers are flocking to see sex films, while complaining about the lack of decent entertainment.

"Yet fine, clean films are falling by the wayside because these same people won't go to see them."

Woman Director Chamber First

Business woman Helen Beirnes says she's no suffragette, but she believes in female involvement.

So now she is involved with 11 men with whom she was elected this week to Victoria Chamber of Commerce board of directors.

No one at the chamber office has troubled to go back over 107 years of records, but Beirnes is believed to be the chamber's first woman director.

"I'm not, a suffragette. I just felt it was time women took a greater part," she explained at her first director's meeting Friday.

She was the only woman candidate for election from a ballot containing 15 names, but it is not her first chamber responsibility.

Within the last two years Beirnes has served on the women's committee, government affairs group and the convention and tourist advisory committee.

Reporting Friday, on behalf of the advisory committee, she said the environmental control subcommittee chaired by former alderman Ian Stewart hopes for standing committee status by June.

She said she hoped the committee would become involved with pollution and planning problems on a regional basis, not just in the immediate capital area.

Also elected for one-year terms were R. Frank Allen, and George Dawson. Two-year directors are Larry Anderson, Louis Finamore, David Fraser, Reg Hind, Philip Holmes, Graham McCall, Ray Rawnsley, Lorne Whyte and Jack Williams.

Arts Weekend Open To Victoria

For three weekends in May Victoria residents will be invited to live at the University of Victoria for group sessions on music, literature and art.

The weekends on campus are aimed at "all adults in the community of Victoria," said Larry Devlin, associate director of the division of continuing education which is sponsoring the program.

For $10 participants can stay at one of the Uvic residences from Friday evening to Sunday noon.

"Within each general area we will be choosing a particular topic and focusing on it," Devlin said.

"We see this as the first of an expanded effort to open the doors of the university to people who want to continue their education.

Program begins May 8 with a music weekend. Uvic music department faculty members Leslie Thimmig, George Corwin and Derek Healey will act as resident tutors.

Goodwill Eyes Junk

Goodwill Enterprises for the Handicapped has its eye on garbage being thrown out by Saanich residents during the municipality's clean-up campaign that began Monday and ends April 24.

Community relations director Wilfred Burton says that he's received numerous phone calls advising him that many of the discarded articles could be used by his organization.

"One lady told me she'd seen two good lawn chairs that could be renovated by our people. Others have reported good standard lamps and other items they've seen."

Burton says that if residents have articles which could be refurbished by Goodwill his organization is prepared to pick them up. Pickup can be arranged by phoning 385-6791.

Desire for Car Led Youth to Thefts

An 18-year-old youth described by Judge William Ostler as having an "insatiable desire" to own a car was given a suspended sentence and placed on a two-year probation for two counts of theft over $50 and one of possession of stolen property.

Ostler added that for one year Alastair Slydell, 241 Robert, would be prohibited from holding a driver's licence and from owning a car.

Slydell pleaded guilty last week to stealing a stereo tape recorder and tapes, worth about $250, from a truck parked on Dingley Dell March 6.

He also pleaded guilty to taking similar stereo equipment, valued at about $200, from a car on Maitland Street March 14 and having $140 worth of stolen stereo equipment in his possession March 17.

Ostler said Slydell's case was "an old story" of a person insisting on owning a car when he cannot afford it and maintaining it by turning to crime.

The judge added that he was impressed by the four character witnesses Slydell called but pointed out that he could not reconcile the accused's behavior with the witnesses' testimony.

The accused, Ostler noted, had committed three deliberate offences on separate occasions.

George E. Mallette, 25, who arrived recently from Winnipeg, was fined a total of $350 when he peaded guilty to driving while under suspension and dangerous driving.

Police took his licence from him in the 800-block Esquimalt Road early April 17 and a short time later observed him drive away from the spot at a high rate of speed.

He was pursued by police who clocked him at speeds of 55 to 60 p.m.h. over the Johnson Street bridge and was stopped at Douglas and Fisgard.

Ostler fined him $200 for driving under suspension, $150 for dangerous driving and prohibited him from driving for six months.

A 23-year-old man was fined $50 when he pleaded guilty pointing a firearm at another person.

John J. Thomas, 534 West Bay Terrace, was having a domestic dispute with his wife April 3 when she left their apartment.

A man arrived at the Thomas apartment to investigate the difficulty and the accused pointed a rifle at him telling him not to take another step or he would be shot.

Lorne McMillan, 56, of 1353 Grant, was sentenced to 21 days in jail for impaired driving.

He was observed driving erratically on Craigflower Road about 1:30 a.m. April 4 and had a previous drinking-driving conviction, court was told.

Johns

Art Education Expert To Retire From Uvic

One of the most popular pofessors at the University of Victoria will retire at the end of June.

He is Prof. A. W. (Wilf) Johns, head of the education section in the faculty of education, who has devoted 47 years to education in Victoria.

A native son, he first started teaching in elementary schools in Victoria.

Later he taught in Central Junior High School where he established the first Saturday morning art classes for children. Work of his students won awards in a world wide competition held in Europe.

In 1942 he was appointed to the staff of the Victoria Normal School to teach art education.

When this institution amalgamated with Victoria College he became an associate proffessor on the faculty. He holds that rank in the faculty of education at Uvic.

He obtained his B.A. degree with honors in art education at the University of Washington.

For the past 10 years he has been head of the art education section and started the permanent collection of paintings and art objects for the university.

Linda Goertz, a former art student now living in Vancouver, said hundreds of teachers thoughout B.C. attribute much of their success in teaching to the guidance and inspiration of Prof. Johns.

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

Churchly Custard-Throwing Act

By Rev. J. A. DAVIDSON

"Dear old Ernie shouldn't have said that," My Irritable Friend, with some asperity in his voice, offered that comment as we began a flagon of coffee in his study a couple of days ago.

Then, in gentler voice, he added, "But perhaps he was misquoted, or inadequately quoted, or quoted out of context."

"Ernie who?" I asked. "And what did he say that makes you so uncharacteristically irritable?"

M.I.F. shoved a newspaper clipping at me and drew my attention to two paragraphs marked with red ink. They reported two statements recently made by Dr. Ernest E. Long, the capable and usually judicious secretary of the General Council of the United Church of Canada, the Church in which both of us serve as parish ministers.

Dr. Long was reported to have said that much of the pressure is taken off our Church's leaders by the Moderator, one of whose responsibilities in addressing service clubs across Canada and attending to similar duties. I raised one eyebrow at that: I have been assuming that the Moderator is the United Church's Number One Leader — "the chief executive officer of the Church," as church law has it.

My other eyebrow nearly reached my receding hairline when I read what followed: "Of course, pastors work hard. But it's much harder for the executives of the Church." As I read that I heard M.I.F. warning me, "Remember the old showbiz maxim, 'Never inhale when taking a custard-pie in the face'."

"That's great custard pitching," he said, "Getting the Moderator and the pastors in quick succession."

Our pastorish prejudices glowed radiantly as we mediated solemnly on the two tests provided by Dr. Long. We did recognize that a Church must have some kind of large-scale organization and administration.

We also recognized that any bureaucracy tends to become an end in itself — even one which begins the day with prayers. An ecclesiastical bureaucracy will tend to treat its titular head — the Moderator or Primate or President or what-have-you — as a functionary who goes about speaking to Kiwanians and attending to similar duties: this, of course, enables the bureaucrats to get on with the real work of the Church without undue interference.

We may be wrong about this, but we are inclined to see the Moderator as in some way our Ombudsman and as the fellow who can help shift and remove some of the bureaucratic sludge which clogs the conduits of communication in the Church.

Then, from the pastoral position, we formulated a comforting principle which we tentatively labelled, "The Law of Diminishing Returns in Bureaucratic Operations". This is illustrated in our United Church experience.

The quantity of bureaucratic attention (quality has nothing to do with it) reaches a certain point beyond which all concerned tacitly agree that its recipients cannot be expected to respond to all of it and so may pick and choose in it and safely ignore any of it they don't care for.

M.I.F. said that the very lavishness of the mimeographed bumph coming from Church H.Q. actually gives the pastor greater freedom to do his job as he sees fit than he would have if the bureaucratic attention were tighter and sharper.

We were very fair, however, about our Church's bureaucrats. We agreed that the average bureaucrat is quite competent and hardworking — perhaps even as competent and hardworking as the average pastor.

As I rose to leave, M.I.F. uttered a sort of secular benediction: "Quis custodes ipsos custodiet?"

"In case you've forgotten your meagre Latin," he added, "that means, 'Who will throw custards at the custodians?'"

Royal Roads Cadets Set Sunday Church Parade

More than 150 cadets and staff from Royal Roads Services College will parade to the 11 a.m. Sunday service in First United Church.

Col. K. E. Lewis, commandant, will read the lesson and the benediction will be given by Chaplain Don Hatfield.

Special music is to be provided by the Royal Roads choir and the anthem will be sung by First United's senior choir. Congregational singing will be led by the church's vocal and instrumental group, The Connectors.

Marriage Workshop Set

A two-session workshop entitled More Joy In Your Marriage will be held in Metropolitan United Church Annex May 4 and 11 from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m.

The workshop is sponsored by Greater Victoria Citizens' Counselling Centre.

Oaken Beam Not from Ark

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—An oak beam discovered on Mt. Ararat and believed by some to have been part of the Biblical Noah's Ark is of much more recent origin, according to UCLA scientists.

Dr. Rainer Berger, head of the UCLA isotope laboratory, said the beam, found at the 13,500-foot level of the mountain in eastern Turkey in 1955, was approximately 1,230 years old.

"The beam came from a tree felled around 700 A.D, or roughly 3,000 years after Noah is believed to have embarked," Berger said.

City Organist Transfers To Revelstoke

Donald J. Woodworth, organist at St. John's Anglican Church since 1966, is leaving to become superintendent of music to the Revelstoke school district.

He will give a farewell recital in St. John's Church, Sunday at 7 p.m. There will be a reception afterwards in the lounge of the Old Rectory, 1611 Quadra.

Woodworth is a native of Calgary.

Father Guest Minister

Rev. Albert T. King, 81, of Lethbridge, Alta., will preach in his son's church Sunday at 7 p.m.

He is the father of Rev. Albert E. King, minister of Metropolitan United, Victoria. King Sr., once a medical missionary in Newfoundland, will speak on the subject, Who Wins?

"My father travelled around the Newfoundland coast from one small settlement to another," said King Jr., "but never became accustomed to the sea. He was a poor sailor—but he's still an active minister at Lethbridge."

Philatelist's Values, Goals Important

By ROBERT G. OLIPHANT

The following few paragraphs contain thoughts on two very important philatelic areas, namely, values, and goals to set for the most enjoyment and knowledge from the hobby.

Some collectors cherish items for their monetary worth only; a perspective better left to the dealer and to the parasite of this hobby — the person who uses philately only as a place to invest money.

The monetary value should only enter when purchasing, insuring, selling or trading, and in that way, stamps may be evaluated, as the true connoisseur always does, on physical condition and on quality of design.

Much of the potential pleasure and information acquirable from philately is drained through regimentation and too much instruction. (This often occurs in the guidance of young people.)

To achieve the maximum, to keep your interest, be diversified, be venturesome!

Completeness is thought by some enthusiasts to be a great achievement and on that they set their goal. But to me, a far greater accomplishment is when an assemblage favorably exemplifies its assembler.

Ascension Island placed on sale April 6, four definitives featuring fish and a portrait of the Queen. The fish are: 4d, two wahoos; 9d, two coalfish; 1s 9d, two dolphin fish and 2s 3d, a soldier fish. This quartet was Delacryl printed by Thomas de la Rue.

Situated in the South Atlantic, midway between Africa and South America, Ascension, as part of the Tristan da Cunha group, is a dependency of St. Helena Island. Ascension's first stamps appeared in 1922.

A 5-cent pictorial issued April 13 by Australia commemorates the 11th International Grassland Congress being held at Surfers Paradise, Queensland, Aust. It commenced April 13, and it will end on the 23rd.

Norway released four salient pictorials April 10 for European Nature Conservation Year. Pictured are: 40-ore, a wolf; 60-ore, mogop flowers; 70-ore, the Voringsfossen waterfall; and 100-ore, a sea eagle in flight.

April 12 was the 25th anniversary of the death of a prominent philatelist, President Franklin D. Roosevelt. For that occasion, Laos issued a stamp April 12.

The Rock and Hobby Show will be held in the Victoria Curling Rink, 1952 Quadra Street, from April 23 to 26. The hours for the 23rd, 24th and 25th are 11 a.m. to 11 p.m., and on the 26th, the show will be open from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. The Greater Victoria Philatelic Society will be represented at the show.

Spectacular View Climax of Hike Trail

By HUMPHRY DAVY

A two and three-quarter-mile trail, ending with one of the most spectacular views of the northern Saanich peninsula, has been developed by the regional district park planners.

The trail starts from Beaver Lake, skirts the west side of Elk Lake, and for a short distance runs east on Brookleigh Road, to the foot of Bear Mount.

And there, too, you will find blue-eyed Mary.

WILD FLOWERS

This is an ideal Sunday morning walk — not too strenuous and with plenty of attractions along the route — especially wildflowers which are now at their best.

When we went to the summit of Bear Mount this week we were mainly interested in finding and photographing clumps of Calypso Bulbosa. This is a delicate little orchid which is becoming extremely rare as more and more of its invironment is destroyed.

DO IT NOW

We didn't find one, so we concentrated on masses of blue-eyed Mary— a small fragile flower which grows on rocky openings, trilliums and the sea blush, a species of thrift.

We advised people to visit Bear Mount now because in a few years it may lose its wilderness aspects.

The 53 acres at the summit is a park, but the slopes are privately owned and once development takes place, another secluded spot near Victoria, will disappear.

As far as the views from summit, we have often wondered why artists haven't painted landscapes from this vantage point — before houses occupy most of the land and overhead transmission lines run across the open fields.

Weddings

Duncan — Robinson

Cheri Carol, daughter of Mr. and Mrs Henry Robinson, 662 Sedger Road, and Mr. Lorne Francis Duncan, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. Duncan, 121 West Maddock Street, were united in marriage in a double ring ceremony by Pastor T. Wescott of Vancouver, at 4 p.m. April 4th in Sluggett Memorial Baptist Church, Brentwood.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was lovely in a floor length gown of satin and lace panels, her mother's bridal dress. Her veil of tulle was held by a coronet of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of pink roses and white carnations. Matron of honor Mrs. B. Duncan and bridesmaid Miss Tas Duncan wore identically styled gowns in mauve. They carried colonial bouquets.

Best man was Mr. Brian Duncan and usher was Mr. Robert Duncan.

Monkman — Dowdall

Father Gerald Donnagan officiated at a double ring ceremony in St. Elizabeth's Church, Ottawa, Ontario, on April 11th, at 2:30 p.m., when Sharon Mary Christine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick S. Dowall of Perth, Ontario, exchanged vows with Mr. Lorne Gordon Monkman, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Monkman of 1210 Lockley Road, Victoria, B.C.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and was attended by her sister Mrs. Irene Hudson. Mr. Richard Rennie was best man, and Mr. Danny Hudson ushered the guests.

The newlyweds left for a honeymoon trip to Quebec City. On their return they will reside in Ottawa.

Boucher — Wilkinson

Mr. Frank Boucher and Marney Ann Wilkinson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Wilkinson, were married March 14th, 1970, at 3 p.m. in the Church of the Nazarene; Reverend W. Bahan officiated. Mr. Charles Parker played the organ and Mrs. Sarah Siple was soloist.

The bride was lovely in a floor length coral dress. Her white fingertip veil was studded with coral roses and she wore a pearl coronet.

Her attendants were Miss Lillian Huck, maid of honour; Miss Brenda Wilkinson, birdesmaid; Miss Heather Wilkinson, junior bridesmaid and Miss Karolynne Donald, flower-girl. Their dresses were short and identically styled; Two were in yellow and two in green. They each wore a single strand of pearls, white lace gloves and matching floral headdresses. The two older girls had yellow carnation wrist corsages and the two younger girls carried baskets of yellow daisies. Mr. George Boucher, brother of the groom was best man, and Mr. Bryan Cramer was the usher. Tad Wilkinson lit the tapers and Dwain Pack looked after the Guest Book. The wedding reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, 1276 Montrose Avenue, Victoria. The new Mr. and Mrs. Boucher are making their home at Gold River, B.C.

COMFORT WITH CHARM
$69,000

The type of home that the Uplands has always been famous for, CHARACTER HOME AND SPACIOUS PROPERTY. Lovely entrance hall to a main floor accommodating GRACIOUS LIVING ROOM, LARGE DINING ROOM, DEN, POWDER ROOM, KITCHEN AND LAUNDRY ROOM. Up the open stairs to another lovely hallway, off which we find FOUR BEDROOMS, TWO BATHROOMS AND SUNROOM. There are SWEEPING SEA-VIEWS from most rooms. Wall-to-wall carpeting installed a year or two ago. The grounds lend themselves to your development of swimming pool, patios etc. Beautifully treed. Let me show you this true Uplands home. B. E. JEFFERY, 385-7707 anytime.

UPLANDS
GLORIOUS SEA VIEWS

A UNIQUE HOME, A UNIQUE SETTING, A UNIQUE VIEW. This home will accommodate very comfortably either a retired couple, or a family. The sloping lot is extensively landscaped and completely sprinklered for easy maintenance. There are numerous plants and shrubs which will take the eye of the person who loves gardening. The ground level entrance leads to a generous floor area — living room 23x15 — separate dining room and slide doors to large sundeck. Bedroom en suite with 4-pce. bathroom, small cosy den. Open stairway leads down to 3-BEDROOMS — BATHROOM AND RUMPUS ROOM — doors to ground level patios. There are many extras — double carport and parking for three other vehicles. All this for only $65,000. Exclusive Listing. Call D. G. WHYTE, 385-7707 anytime.

ELEVATION CAPTURES VIEW OF SEA AND MOUNTAINS FROM 6 OF 7 ROOMS

The lavish use of glass brings the outdoors in — with commanding views thruout this Post and Beam, 3-bedrom home. Beamed ceilings in all rooms give an airy feelingto the 1530 sq. ft. Wall-to-wall carpeting lends warmth. Clever use of open shelves and latticed dividers between living and dining rooms extends light from glass wall of both rooms. Long, long used brick fireplace with raised hearth in living room, is highlighted by rich panelled wall beside it. Built-in range and oven in kitchen, plus huge serving counter doubling as breakfast bar. Next to it, is the family room — with hidden wall storage. Both the 3-pce. and 4-pce. bathrooms are beautifully tiled in mosaic on walls, floors and one of the vanity counters. Garden reflects simplicity of Japanese landscaping. Large double carport. A truly distinguished home. Asking $43,900 with excellent, low interest rate mortgage.

Colquitz Irregulars Hope for Sun

By DON VIPOND

If it doesn't rain too hard, the Colquitz Creek Irregulars march again Sunday.

The motley band — mostly boys and girls but some men and women — have only a couple of things in common but what they do share seems to weld them into a stubborn group.

They are convinced that under the jungle of blackberry bushes and assorted thickets flanking Colquitz Creek lies a park.

Joe Pilot, one of the leaders of the Irregulars, says the park could rival Beacon Hill — with boating down the stream and swimming eventually.

The other thing the Irregulars share is a taste for a project which is short on rules, long on an easy-going do-your-own-thing attitude.

FIVE MILES

Colquitz Creek wanders about five miles from Beaver Lake to Portage Inlet. Through parts of suburbia it almost vanishes but it's stubborn too. Over the years it has been subject to all the abuse of any creek which makes the mistake of getting in the way of roads, houses and people.

In fits and starts the Irregulars have turned out on weekends to hack away. Now a swath about 100 paces on either side of the stream has been cleared for close to a mile south from Hyacinth Park.

Now that progress is showing,the ranks of the Irregulars are growing. Everyone is welcome and last Sunday about 200 showed up. It was a very casual thing, with long-haired kids, guitars, even a flute and drums. Shades of the spirit of '76.

Maybe the only rule is: work when you want, flake out when you want. Either way, relax and enjoy it.

HEAVY DEBRIS

Recently the Irregulars were joined by the Regulars. Men of the Queens Own Rifles were on hand to help move some of the heavy debris with their equipment. They brought their bugle band.

Pilot says the park could eventually be two miles long and have the shape of a pollywog. Already cleared is part of the long thin tail along the stream. The large area of the head would be down by Portage Inlet. Almost all the land worked on to date is owned by Saanich.

Sunday the work of removing roots will continue in the vicinity of Burnside, Interurban and the Trans-Canada Highway. Starting time about 10 a.m.

For some time now local businesses have been lending a hand with refreshments — providing hot dogs and buns, soft drinks and dixie cups. The municipality of Saanich is supplying tools.

"It's just a case of having the support of the community to bring this park into existence," Pilot said Friday.

CHAMBER DISAPPOINTED

No Reception for Cruise Ship

Chamber of Commerce directors expressed disappointment and concern Friday that the first cruise ship of the season to visit Victoria docked without the colorful reception normally accorded tourist ships.

Directors approved a resolution expressing the hope that "ways and means can be found to avoid such a tragic recurrence" as the quiet arrival last Wednesday of Westline's West Star from the Caribbean, Mexico and California ports of call.

FOREIGN CREW

The vessel was picketed at CP docks as it discharged passengers bound for the mainland. Seafarers' International Union was protesting the use of a foreign crew and lockout of Canadian crews from the company's ships. A second vessel, Polar Star, was tied up at Esquimalt when SIU pickets prevented refit work being done. The ship's owners have applied for an injuction to stop the picketting.

Reporting for the harbor and transportation committee, Roy Denny said the committee did not wish to become involved "in a dispute of this sort," but the chamber should "express its concern and disappointment that the warm welcome normally accorded cruise ships was not given to this one."

He noted the vessel was registered in Monrovia, Lybia, and carried a Spanish crew. The SIU had succeded in keeping out not only taxi drivers and baggage handlers, and tugs when it was time to cast off, but "shocking as it seems, the pilot," Denhy said.

He said this was particularly hazardous for Victoria's confined harbor.

It was the chamber which organized formal welcomes for last summer's cruise ships, which were accorded brass band treatment at Ogden Point docks.

A director noted the operating company, Westline had pulled out of Vancouver, and may find it necessary to withdraw from Victoria if it continued to encounter opposition.

"Any harassment is a serious thing to the port of Victoria and we should record our objection," Denny said.

Directors also endorsed a study by city hall planning staff which recommends to Transport Minister Donald Jamieson that a Victoria harbor commission be set up.

A major requisite for a successful harbor commission would be the assumption of Ogden Point control from Canadian National Railways, the report said.

Denny noted that only a few months ago a CN spokesman came to a special chamber meeting to describe the improvements planned by the crown company.

"I don't know whether he had his tongue in his cheek or what, in telling us all the things they were going to do, but hardly anything has happened," Denny said.

Industry Wants Tax-Raised Cash For Pollution War

VANCOUVER (CP) — The president of the British Columbia Council of Forest Industries said Friday that government should help industry with cash concessions in the battle for pollution control.

G. L. Draeseke said in the council's annual report, distributed at the organization's annual meeting, that if the general public is "genuinely concerned about pollution, it must be prepared to help in the fight."

"Government must accept its responsibilities, not simply by imposing tough anti-pollution legislation, but by helping in the fight, either through tax concessions or actual grants."

Draeseke said the forest industry has shouldered its share of responsibility in the field of pollution control and it remains "a problem of major concern to the industry today."

"The public was made aware of this problem in 1969 as never before," he said. "Some reaction has been extreme and we hope that more evenly balanced attitudes will prevail in 1970."

The CFI president said the industry is also concerned with "an intelligent approach toward the use of publicly-owned lands."

"Logging in a wilderness area may seem reprehensible to some who only see the logging in isolation," said Draeseke. "But only a managed and regularly-cropped forest is healthy and accessible to the people who wish to enjoy it."

He siad no one benefits if trees "are allowed to stand until they rot and fall. Sustained yield logging preserves the forest and gives access."

In other developments at the one-day annual meeting, R. G. Rogers, president of Crown Zellerbach Canada Ltd., was re-elected council chairman.

J. O. Hemmingson, executive vice-president of MacMillan Bloedel Ltd., was re-elected first vice-chairman, and Ian Barclay, president and chief executive officer of B.C. Forest Products Ltd., second vice-chairman.

Eighteen directors were also named.

Quake In Alaska

An earthquake shook the Alaska coast about 150 miles south of Anchorage Friday night, the third to hit the general area in the past 11 days.

No injuries or damage were reported from the latest disturbance which registered 6.2 on the 10-point Richter scale.

The earlier quakes were centred in the sparsely-populated Yukatat area about 150 miles northwest of Juneau. The Pacific rim, including Vancouver Island, is recognized as a major earthquake zone.

With a series of killer earthquakes claiming close to 2,000 lives in Turkey three weeks ago, is there a possibility the Alaska tremors are related? And might the ones in Alaska touch off one or more on Vancouver Island?

Seismologist W. G. Milne of the Dominion Observatory in Saanich says no to both questions.

Jeffels Won't Pay To See Film Filth

"I won't pay extravagant prices to watch some of the filth that is shown in our film theatres," R. R. Jeffels, director of admissions at the University of Victoria, said today.

"Many current films are exploiting the anti-hero as an assault on the accepted tradition of a hero.

Dr. Jeffels was addressing a meeting of women delegates attending a three-day conference of the Pipe Line Contractors' Association of Canada, in the Empress Hotel.

"We in Victoria live on a blessed isle and we breathe relatively fresh air. Go to some of the big cities and you will find examples of man's inhumanity to man; the kind of abrasive nerve-wracking frustration that he suffers. In fact, man is becoming depersonalized in these crowded centres," said Jeffels.

Tie Changes Picture Of World Cup Soccer

LONDON (CP) — England, only two weeks away from a World Cup warm-up program in Latin America, hit an unexpected snag when Wales forced a 1-1 tie in Cardiff today at the start of the British soccer champiofship.

England — the World Cup holders — has won the British championship four times in the last five years and had been expected to beat Wales, rated the weakest of the four teams.

Canada Opens U.S. Consulate

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The Canadian minister of Supply and Services cites growing commercial and industrial relations of this area with Western Canada at ceremonies Friday marking the opening of a Canadian consulate in Minneapolis.

"This is a region which is bound together not only by geography but also by common traditions and, in many cases, by family ties that spread across the 49th parallel, said James Richardson.

"This is an important area with a population of 6,000,000 people and an income of $17,000,000,000," Richardson said "Our exports to the area at the present time are estimated at about $230,000,000 annually."

Richardson noted that Canada is, by far, the best customer for the goods which the United States sells abroad. He said Canada last year supplied a market of well over $9,000,000,000 of U.S. goods. This meant that nearly one dollar in four of total U.S. export earnings resulted from sales in Canada.

"It is our view that if a Canadian businessman feels it is to his economic advantage to invest in your country, we should do everything possible to assist him," Richardson said.

"Conversely, we are anxious to assist American businessmen to establish operations in Canada, whether these be subsidiary operations, joint ventures or the sale of technology — your famous 'American know-how'."

The consulate will be primarily oriented toward export trade promotion and industrial promotion, but will also perform normal consular functions. It will be headed by Glyn E. Woollam, consul and trade commissioner. Woollam was formerly a Canadian commercial counsellor in London.

Accident To Spur Rescue Plan

HOUSTON (Reuters) — The accident to the Apollo 13 mission will bring demands in the United States for all future missions to be safeguarded by a backup rescue system.

Ironically, on a day before the mysterious fault which crippled the moonbound spaceship, the Manned Spacecraft Centre disclosed plans for a rescue launch which could speed through space and pick up stranded astronauts.

The four-man "space tug," whose safety devices would include a "rover" vehicle for roaming the moon's surface, will not be in operation before 1980, they said.

A spokesman for the space centre told reporters the "space tug" could also place satellites in earth orbit, service existing satellites, help to assemble space bases, shunt other space vehicles into higher or lower orbits and transport crews and cargo between space vehicles.

Unlike the proposed "space-shuttle," a re-usable two-stage craft for relaying crew and cargo from earth into orbit, the "space tug" would not be able to re-enter earth's atmosphere.

Another rescue possibility would be to have a second rocket standing by on earth to leap to the rescue of an aborted mission.

Weyburn Clipped By Thunder Bay

Nurses Fear Staff Cutbacks

The president of the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. said Friday that recently-announced limits on government hospital spending can mean only one thing—a "cutback in staff."

Mrs. Monica Angus said any reduction would come at a time when the level of nursing is verging on the unsafe. She urged an investigation into health spending in the province.

"It is time the taxpayers knew how much of the 5 per cent sales tax is going to health care."

The registered nursing profession is losing ground in both hospital and home care programs, she said and added that RNs often find themselves in a soley administrative role, seldom dealing directly with patients.

Suit Aimed At Buffalo Arena

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — A taxpayer obtained a court order Thursday directing the city and its new National Hockey League franchise to show why it should not be enjoined from going ahead with the expansion of Memorial Auditorium.

James J. Riley of Buffalo, an insurance broker, obtained the order from Justice James O. Moore of New York state Supreme Court. It is returnable next Monday.

In his suit, Riley charged that a 20-year-old contract signed by the city and the Niagara Frontier Hockey Corp. April 2 contained variations from an original draft lease to "the substantial benefit and gain of the hockey corporation."

He contended the expansion would cost $10,500,000, while a completely new arena could be built for less than $7,000,000.

Work on expanding the city-owned auditorium to 15,000 from 9,800 seats has already begun and is expected to be completed in November.

Tips for Successful Growing Of Warm-Soil Vegetables

By JACK BEASTALL

The fascination of gardening lies in the possibility of growing something new and different. Even a lifetime devoted to this pursuit fails to exhaust the conceivable potential.

This applies to vegetables as well as ornamental plants. Although the scope may not be so diverse, there are different varieties of any given vegetable and always something we have never attempted to grow.

Among the latter will be vegetables which prefer a little warmer growing season than the average for west coast gardens. These present a challenge because they can be successfully grown when given a situation to their liking.

Others will grow well here but are not generally included in the vegetable garden plan. An example is the so-called Jerusalem artichoke which has nothing to do with Jerusalem, nor is it related to the true artichoke. It is a tuberous sunflower, Helianthus tuberosum.

Growth goes to eight feet or so, and the underground tubers, prolifically produced, are lifted as needed from November on. Since they tend to shrivel when improperly stored, it is best to limit each digging to a three-week supply.

Vegetables which need warm and settled weather conditions before being planted into the open garden include the Lima bean, Eggplant or Aubergine, Sweet peppers, and Okra or Gumbo.

Success with these depends on an early sowing of seed indoors, seedlings being transferred to veneer plant bands or clay pots.

This method of growing ensures a strong plant and an undisturbed ball of roots to set into the garden, thus reducing the chance of a setback, something quite important in areas with a long but slow growing season.

In gardens equipped with a fairly large coldframe with high sides, located in a sunny warm position, exceptional success can be had with sweet peppers, okra, and eggplant.

The indoor-started plants are transferred directly to the bed of the frame, and the frame covers used at night and on cool days to prolong the period of warmth. During summer the high sides of the frame form a heat trap that is just what the plants need.

But a coldframe is not essential. Nearly all gardens have a warm corner with reflected heat from a building that needs only a simple temporary structure erected to keep off chilling summer winds. Often a piece of burlap or three-ply will do the trick.

The Lima beans are best started in veneer plant bands indoors unless the garden soil warms quite early, in which case outdoor sowings in a warm spot can be quite successful.

Another contributing factor is the selection of a type, variety, or strain that is best suited to growing in our more northerly latitudes. Sometimes a variety name will give a clue, such as New Hampshire as opposed to California or Texas; but often we have to experiment to find one ideally suited to an individual garden.

Tips for The Home Gardener

The dwarf, or bush types of Lima beans not only reach flowering stage much earlier, but, being closer to the soil are not so easily checked by cold winds. In fact, judicious planting between other crops that provide shelter (but not shade) assures wonderful results.

Okra, or Gumbo, is seldom seen in local gardens. It is an interesting little plant when sporting its mallow-type blooms, but more captivating when the cut-up fruits are added to soups and stews. Even in canned soups its presence can be immediately detected.

Large plants have never resulted in my garden, but production of two or three slender, pepper-shaped fruits on each plant has provided enough to perk up many otherwise ordinary dishes.

In the sweet pepper listings we have more choice. These are not the hot peppers used in pickels, they are mild fruits of distinct flavor to use raw or cooked. All sweet peppers can be eaten raw whether they are red or green, once they have reached two to three inches in length, and can be cooked at any size.

In a fairly rich soil and warm location the plants will grow sufficiently to carry from two to six large peppers. Strains bred for northern climates are increasing, and results are much more certain than 25 years ago.

While I have never succeeded in producing outdoors an eggplant fruit as large as the largest imported ones, the two or three fruits produced by the average plant here add interest to daily menus.

An early start, fairly rich humusy soil, and shelter from chilling breezes, are the main points of culture.

Many other vegetables rarely seen in gardens should be tried if only for interest and experience to the gardener.

These are mostly separate from the heat loving group, although they do need a soil and location that will prevent setbacks during the growing period.

The Kolhl-rabi, which produces a swollen stem above soil level from which leaves emerge, is a welcome substitude for turnip. A well prepared humus soil holding heat and moisture helps produce the steady unrestricted growth essential to palatable stems, for it is the swollen stem that is eaten.

Chinese cabbage is another plant needing a soil that will maintain steady growth. This can be cooked or eaten raw in salads, its texture and flavor being a delightful change from lettuce.

Speaking of lettuce, a trial of the soft butterhead types or oak-leaf types in green and bronze can make an ordinary salad more appealing to non-salad devotees.

Endive, American cress with all the flavor of watercress, salsify (needs a long season like parsnip), winter radish, pink squash which is fibre-free, and a host of novelties which occasionally produce an outstanding vegetable, have been in seed lists for years but are yet to be tried by many vegetable gardeners.

WEEK'S WORK

By JACK BEASTALL

Have your home-raised hardy annual plants hardened-off as soon as possible and planted in the garden.

Young cuttings of many shrubs will root quickly now — lavender, santolina, artemisia and others of the grey-leaved kinds.

Tie in new clematis shoots as they grow to avoid tangle.

Give a feeding of acid type fertilizer to small rhododendrons and camellias. Water in well, then apply mulch on surface of well dampened peatmoss.

Young dogwoods, magnolias, and small trees will benefit from a mulch of leafmould, seaforest while soil is still damp and cool.

Test Bill Killed

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A bill to test the legality of sending American troops to battle in Vietnam was killed by a Rhode Island Senate committee Friday. The measure was patterned after a law recently enacted by the Massachusetts legislature. That law says no Massachusetts resident can be compelled to serve in an undeclared war.

PETITION TRANSMITTED

Soviet Liberty Plea

By DAVID BONAVIA

MOSCOW — Soviet citizens should enjoy more free discussion and access to information—about their government, about each other, and about the outside world—this was the central theme of the protest document circulated in Moscow under the names of three Soviet intellectuals, and transmitted recently to the West.

The main signatory of the document, in the form of a letter to the Soviet leadership, was said to be Dr. Andrei Sakharov, the nuclear physicist, whose earlier criticism of the Soviet system was published in America in book form nearly two years ago.

The very fact that it is impractical to verify the authorship of this document is a sympton of the ills it talks of. Any Western correspondent knows that if he approaches the alleged author directly and asks for confirmation that the document is from his pen, he may be putting the man concerned in an even more compromising position.

Whether or not Dr. Sakharov is the real author of the letter to Leonid I. Brezhnev, the party leader, and Aleksei N. Kosygin, the premier, the fact remains that whoever wrote it has an estimate of the Soviet system's faults which is very close to that of informed but anti-Soviet Western observers, including many Western Communists.

As pointed out in the document, one of the central ambitions of the Soviet Union is to catch up with and overtake the West in applied technology and economic power. If it is falling short of this goal, it is mainly because its people's access to information of all kinds is so severely limited.

It is not impossible or particularly risky to listen to Western radio broadcasts in Russia, but they are a poor substitute for printed matter. Westerners resident in Moscow may receive any kind of newspaper or book, however "anti-Soviet," through the post. But books are often confiscated if brought into the country in personal luggage—a weird inconsistency—and of course they must not be given or lent to Soviet citizens.

The Soviet press provides a wide and varied coverage of everything that is good in the Soviet Union, and quite a lot of things that are bad, A Soviet citizen can criticize a laundry, a railway or even a government ministry, and if he writes to a newspaper, his complaint may be printed and investigated.

But he may not publicly criticize the Communist Party (unless he is a party member, and then only on question of detail), or a member of the Politburo or—especially not—the country's foreign policy. He may not discuss military expenditure or the secret police, criticize political trials, expulsions of foreigners, or a variety of other things.

Economics is politics in Russia, and if a policy is sanctioned from above, it is not for the small man to challenge it, but to do his utmost to make it work, and perhaps to voice the occasional measured criticism of its application.

Back-to-Work Offer Won't Help—Thatcher

REGINA (CP) — Premier Thatcher said an offer Friday by striking electricians to return to work for no pay on the nearly-completed Saskatchewan Centre of the Arts won't help matters.

The electricians began a strike Wednesday and the government has cancelled a gala opening of the $7,500,000 centre that was scheduled for May 4. Governor-General Michener, who was to have officially opened the centre, has been advised of the cancellation.

The premier told reporters the electricians can stay on strike for "a day, a month or a year, but they still won't get more than six per cent. If they strike all year, our position will still be the same."

He said even if the electricians were to return to work immediately, the centre could not open in time. Other workers, such as audio technicians, have left the city because of the delay.

"This death-bed repentance isn't much help to us."

Thatcher said thousands of tickets for a concert series will have to be refunded. Some of the performers may put on shows in Saskatoon instead of Regina. The Regina Centre, located near the Legislature, may be opened in September.

Fossils Unearthed

JEKYLL ISLAND, Ga. (AP) — Bones of several prehistoric animals have been unearthed in Glynn County during construction of the Interstate 95 highway. Included were remains of a giant and baby sloth, a mammoth sea turtle, an ice-age horse and a whale. A team from the University of Georgia plans to return in June to try to find a full skeleton.

FLASHBACK ON CANADA

Critical Stage Reached in Rebellion

By BOB BOWMAN

April 18, 1885, was a critical day in the Northwest Rebellion. Tension had been mounting since April 2 when Big Bear's Cree Indians had attacked Frog Lake, killed nine men, and taken prisoners including women. The Blackfoot Indians had been ready to rise against Calgary but were being restrained by the great missionaries, Father Lacombe and Reverend John McDougall. Who could tell for how long?

The Indians camped around Edmonton were beating their war drums, and James Mowat had just made his daring ride to Calgary to get military help. It had not yet arrived.

The Crees were besieging Battleford, and the citizens of Saskatoon were caught between Duck Lake, the centre of hostilities to the north, and Chief White Cap's Sioux at Moose Woods Reserve, a few miles to the south. Eventually Chief White Cap marched his Sioux through Saskatoon to join Riel, but they did little damage.

Yorkton was in desperate straits. A new farmers' colony had been started there and Major T. C. Watson was rushed from Ottawa to organize defences for the community. He addressed a meeting on April 18 and 40 men volunteered to serve under him. Their first job was to build a stockade for which they had to cut and haul 2,400 logs 11 feet long. The Little Bones Indians, eight miles to the southwest, had grown bold and restless but did not attack.

Many homesteaders throughout the general rebellion area volunteered to haul supplies from the CPR. A man with a team was paid $10 a day but the work was dangerous. He had to guarantee to travel at least 20 miles a day and also be prepared to carry wounded soldiers on the return trips. Some of the teamsters made more money in a few weeks than they could have made all year on their farms.

Other events on April 18:

1838 — Special Council to govern Lower Canada held first meeting.

1846 — Commissioners began studying losses of Lower Canada rebellion.

1960 — President de Gaulle of France began four-day state visit to Ottawa. Canada and Russia signed three-year trade agreement.

The Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Problem: One seven-month-old, slightly retarded, Basset-hound. The background: I have a small patio (no garden) and keep potted plants out there. The dilemma: Droopy is mad over bones and if I don't keep her supplied she tears up the house. And what does she do when I do give her bones? She goes out and buries them in the flowerpots, of course. Needless to say I'm running out of, plants, pots and patience. You can see I need a good idea, and fast. Please, dear doctor, supply. — T.C.

DEAR T.C.: I'd say you had three preservation problems: (1) preserving pots, (2) preserving your house, and (3) preserving your pup. One can be most easily handled by declaring the patio off limits. (Alternatively, cover the pot soil with heavy wire mesh.) Two and three can best be solved together. Give biscuit-type and-or nylon bones only. This well prevent bone fragment complications in mouth, throat, stomach and intestine. To keep her from being frustrated over having no bone-burial site, try to take Droopy on a long walk or dog-trot about the time she starts to stew about things. This, plus other diversions, should, if pursued diligently enough, eventually wean her away from her burial grounds.

DEAR DR. MILLER: After several weeks of sneezing, my cat's cold is slowly getting better, but she still has it and the doctor still has her on antibiotics. Isn't it dangerous to have her on antibiotics so long? Can't they cause kidney trouble or something? Do vitamins help a cat's cold? What else would? — N.R.

DEAR N.R.: Antibiotics can, indeed, cause problems of their own — in kidneys or elsewhere. Undesirable antibiotic activity is most likely to occur when heavy dosages are used or when dehydration is present. The doctor must weigh such a potential hazard against the effects of discontinuing the antibiotic too soon.

With these long lasting feline respiratory infections, antibiotics are often used for a protracted period to help avoid chronic sinusitis or more deadly complications involving the chest cavity. During this period, in particular, additional vitamins may be indicated including A, C, and some of the B complex. And speaking of undesirable effects, vitamin A overdosage may also prove toxic. So follow your doctor's advice carefully concerning administration of all medication whether antibiotics, vitamins or whatever.

DEAR DR. MILLER: No question, this is just a letter to warn other owners of large dogs. We have a new puppy now, but we lost our three-year-old German short-haired pointer tragically. He died of acute indigestion. He got all bloated and by the time we got him in to the doctor it was too late to save him. The doctor recommended that our new puppy be fed three meals a day now and throughout his life. By avoiding one huge meal, bloating is less likely to occur. Another thing, the dog should not be allowed to drink huge amounts right after meals. This also makes bloating worse. The final point he made was not to allow the dog to play heavily and jump around right after the meal. This may start the bloat by causing the stomach to flop over on itself. Please heed my advice and don't wait until it happens. Then it's too late. — P.R.

COMMENT: Well said. Owners tend to neglect such a potential danger unless they are directly or indirectly familiar with it. Acute gastric dilation occurs with the rapidly developing bloating syndrome. This may occur with or without gastric torsion wherein the stomach flops over within the cavity. Most gastric torsion cases occur after a jumping or running episode. Most cases of acute bloating without torsion occur after the stomach is overloaded.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Having been told our house now holds the distemper virus, our next pup is going to get the very best of care to keep it from getting this bug. We'll get it its shots when it's old enough and will keep it plenty healthy in the meantime so it will have plenty of strength to fight any infection. Can we do more? — N.F.

DEAR N.F.: Yes, you'd better do more in one department and less in another. "More" means starting on the pup's shots before you even take it home. It needs definite protection to survive in a house where distemper virus is already present. Waiting could allow the distemper virus to get a possibly fatal headstart on any vaccination attempt. Secondly, a roly-poly puppy is not likely to be more resistant to virus infection. Rather, less so. A slightly underfed pup has, surprisingly, more resistance. The diet should be top quality. But the total amount should be just enough to keep the puppy slightly on the lean side.

Charred Bodies Surround Beleaguered U.S. Post

DAK SEANG (AP) — The siege of this shell-battered United States Special Forces camp moved into its 18th day today with only sporadic mortar fire whenever a helicopter landed or anyone stayed above the ground too long.

Outside the bunkers, in the napalm-blackened perimeter, 41 charred North Vietnamese bodies remained strewn near the barbed wire — mute reminders of a massive assault that began April 1 and has flickered out in apparent failure.

But the camp's defenders, seven Special Forces troopers and about 400 Montagnard irregulars, still are worried—not about whether Dak Seang can be taken, but when the next series of attacks will begin.

Friday night, only 10 mortar rounds were lobbed into this central highlands outpost. But 12 miles to the south was a huge red glow; the forward command post at Tan Canh was hit and an ammunition dump had exploded.

A spokesman in Saigon said at least 20 South Vietnamese troops were wounded in the shelling of Tan Canh. It was the first assault on the post, 265 miles northeast of the capital, since it became the spearhead of the attempt to lift the siege here early this month.

Today there was sporadic mortar shelling of Tan Canh.

VOWS HOLD OUT

Dak Seang's 21-year-old commander, Capt. David Cook, said:

Top South Vietnamese commanders say the camp was hit by about 2,000 rocket and mortar shells in the first week of fighting.

Elsewhere in South Vietnam, the U.S. and South Vietnamese commands said today 72 enemy soldiers were killed in scattered fighting that left two Americans dead and 35 wounded.

Poor, Reluctant Spain Enters 20th Century

By FENTON WHEELER

TRUJILLO (AP) — The 20th century is ready for Spain but Spain still may not be ready for the 20th century.

No matter. Time, events and population are pushing the country forward—faster than the average Spaniard cares to think about and faster than most people predicted 10 years ago.

Signs of change are everywhere. So are the old ways.

Here in the home town of Francisco Pizarro, in the Extremedura (hard land) miniskirts and television aerials compete with black shawls and burros and with the ever-increasing number of little Spanish cars.

In the plaza of the conqueror of Peru, city workers paint new parking places for the summer tourist rush. And in the nearby Victory Cafe men gather for their morning coffee. They have done this for years but now they gather around a gas heater, not a wood fire.

A wall poster brings in the rest of the country, and a little philosophy. It urges Trujillo residents to "wake up" every morning by reading a certain Madrid newspaper. Trujillo, like many Spanish small towns, could use an awakening. Its population has fallen from 12,000 to 7,000 in the last 10 years.

POLITICS OUT

"We don't think much about politics in this part of the country," says Francisco Corrales Trejo, editor of Trujillo's weekly newspaper, Opinion. "What we need is industry."

This view is echoed by a student of 17 who wants to be a businessman. "The economy is most important," he says. "We need to industrialize the country."

A 15-year-old says he hopes to be an engineer. "I would like to stay here," he says, "but I will go to Madrid if necessary."

The record shows one of the young men, perhaps both, will have to leave their home town if they are going to pursue their careers successfully.

Unlike some of their counterparts in the big cities, these students appear neutral or in favor of Prince Juan Carlos de Bourbon as the choice to take over from Gen. Francisco Franco. Spain's future king is 32 and Franco is 77. Does that influence their thinking?

"Could be," says one youth. He looks at an old man driving a burro laden with sticks and observes: "Trujillo is a pretty conservative place but we want change."

The statistics suggest much of Spain's 34,000,000 population might be thinking that way. More than half the population is under 30, about two-thirds under 40.

Change is on the way but it may not be fast enough:

—A superhighway streams out of Madrid for Valencia but after about 10 miles it becomes a truck-jammed, two-lane strip of bumpy asphalt where it takes 10 minutes to move a mile. The highway is being widened, but in the meantime. . . .

—The minimum wage has been raised to 120 pesetas ($1.80) daily and affects 800,000 workers. But a recent survey showed it takes 139 pesetas daily for a family of four in Madrid and 156 pesetas in Barcelona, just for food.

Amid the Burros and Black Shawls: Miniskirts, TV and Little Cars

The government has made strides in developing the Extremedura. Torrefesnada, a shining white village of 120 houses for farm workers, is one of many examples. It was built by the government near Medellin, birthplace of another of the conquistadores, Hernan Cortes. It will have schools, a church and water. But nearby hundreds of women still wash their laundry in streams and thousands of men still travel slowly and painfully each day to work in the fields.

APARTMENTS SPREAD

All over Spain apartments are rising like weeds. On the south coast at Torre del Mar, a fishing village gone resort-happy, the men have deserted the sea for construction wages and the money to buy their own apartment.

The thing in Spain nowadays is to have your own "piso" (apartment) and a Seat car, Spanish version of the Italian Fiat.

In Badajoz, a provincial capital almost in Portugal, apartments are advertised at $270 down and about $35 monthly, payable in 10 to 20 years. The littlest car goes for about $1,000. But this is more than many Spaniards can afford; average per capita income is $720 annually.

Cultural changes also are seeping into Roman Catholic, Franco Spain. Some Barcelona priests have urged countrywide sex education. Movies are still strictly regulated and so is the press. But other things are not.

"I see things in Madrid that would have been impossible 10 years ago," says a mother.

Prostitution is illegal but there are clubs with bar girls and bars where girls can drink and their mothers can't. Bikinis on Spanish women still cause stares but the gawking is less each summer.

SEEK NEW IMAGE

Franco's new cabinet is pushing toward association with the Common Market and the government is trying to get a new image of Spain to the rest of the world. It is diplomatic fashion to encourage links with the Soviet Union.

Tourism, the country's biggest industry, brought more than 21,000,000 visitors to Spain in 1969. The foreigners left pounds, francs, krona, pesos, Deutsche marks, lira, dollars—and also ideas.

With tourism has come some good and some bad. Hashish and marijuana used by foreigners—and some upper middle-class Spanish—are becoming a problem.

But tourism has made practical the restoration of hundreds of historical sites. It employs thousands of Spaniards. Spain is getting crowded but there is plenty of room still. Away from the better-marked highways it is possible to travel for miles without passing anything but olive trees, tired stone villages and sheep.

WITCH DOCTOR CALLED SHOT

JOHANNESBURG (Reuters) — A South African witch doctor threw his bones Friday and after studying them pronounced his interpretation that the Apollo 13 astronauts would land safely.

But the witch doctor, Silas Msgomezulu, added a warning:

"These men have interfered with God and he has turned them back. This is a warning that the Americans should stop landing on the moon."

Takeo Massacre Site Under Siege by Cong

Times News Services

PHNOM PENH — Vietnamese Communist forces have completely encircled the town of Takeo 54 miles south of the Cambodian capital and have now pressed to within 22 miles of here, reports indicated today.

And fears are growing that the continued indiscriminate slaughter of Vietnamese civilians by Cambodian soldiers will touch off a counter-massacre by avenging Viet Cong troops.

Friday there were new reports of the slaying of at least 100 Vietnamese civilians in a detention camp at Takeo, a provincial capital. And today Cambodian police and soldiers conducted a house-to-house search for suspected Viet Cong.

Most Cambodian military men freely admit they consider all Vietnamese to be Viet Cong and one soldier, in confirming the death count of at least a hundred Vietnamese in Takeo, said "We shot them because they were Viet Cong."

The official version, from Col. Kong Chhath, the regional Cambodian government and military commander, was that these newest massacre victims were killed in a crossfire Thursday night when Viet Cong troops infiltrated Takeo.

But a survivor said it was deliberate genocide.

"They told us to lie down, that we should sleep," said La Van Pa, a Vietnamese in his fifties. "Then the soldiers began to shoot with both rifles and machine guns. It continued for so long."

As the Viet Cong forces pressed the Cambodians harder military officials including Maj. Penn Rannde, base commander of the Cambodian Air Force, reiterated a plea for arms aid from the United States.

"What we need most are fighter planes," he said. "Maybe 30 or 40. We hope the Americans will supply them."

Here in Phnom Penh a high-ranking Cambodian officer painted a bleak picture of the conflict.

"All our frontier outposts have been abandoned or lost," he said.

In Prasaut, which had fallen last week to the Viet Cong onslaught, Cambodian troops discovered Friday that the Communists had slipped out of the

By T. D. ALLMAN

TAKEO, Cambodia (WP) — In this usually peaceful town Friday, I saw the bodies of three Vietnamese civilians slaughtered by their Cambodian captors. Other Vietnamese said that the Cambodians had killed or wounded another 150 of them Thursday night and had hauled away the bodies during the darkness.

As at Prasaut two weeks ago, when nearly 100 Vietnamese were massacred, the Cambodians call their victims "Viet Cong."

About 50 Vietnamese survived this latest slaughter, which they said took place Thursday night. Time correspondent Robert Anson and I have managed to rescue one survivor — a boy of 10 — and with other reporters we are trying to save some of the others.

ORDERED KILLINGS

The man who ordered the massacre in Prasaut is here in Takeo. He is a Cambodian paratroop captain. He's more than six feet tall — a rarity in this country. He is a military professional. So far he has refused to give his name to reporters.

But in less than one month, he has ordered the deaths of about 340 Vietnamese civilians — including men, women and children. Journalists interviewed him following the Prasaut massacre in Svay Rieng province.

He admitted ordering the mass slayings there "because they were Viet Cong."

He was transferred to this usually placid little provincial capital, south of Phnom Penh. One of his first acts was to order about 200 Vietnamese men and boys rounded up and held in detention in the primary school here.

I saw them Wednesday, crowded into an open-walled building on the school's grounds.

Friday, Anson and I drove down to Takeo. It was a "no news" day; journalists

Alaskan Senator Backs Canada's Arctic Stand

WARRENTON, Va. (CP) — Alaskan Senator Mike Gravel came to the defence of Canada on the Arctic sovereignty issue Friday night, calling for more talking and less fighting between two traditionally-friendly neighbors.

He told a conference on Canadian studies that Canadian plans to extend its pollution controls 100 miles offshore in the Arctic demonstrates "a strong sense of concern for the safety of our Arctic environment."

"I would hope that my government, in replying to the Canadian position, would focus not on traditional legislative parameters, but more constructively on the broader questions of intent," the Democratic senator said.

Gravel said he admired the decisiveness of Prime Minister Trudeau in submitting the legislation calling for a 12-mile territorial limit and jurisdiction for a 100-mile "anti-pollution zone" in Arctic waters.

WORTH THE RUCKUS

"If it takes a unilateral political act such as the Canadian declaration to focus our attention on the issues, then that act is well worth the ruckus," he said.

The U.S. has rejected outright the Canadian proposal which would change the existing three-mile limit observed by both countries, and has called for an international conference or submission to the World Court to settle the dispute.

"I find it hard to fault the prime minister's argument that this is an area in which the law has not yet caught up with technology," Gravel said.

"Certainly close collaboration is in order between the U.S. and Canada in the face of the imminent exploitation of Arctic resources in order to ensure adequate protection of our Arctic ecology."

SHARE SAME INTERESTS

The U.S., he said, shares with Canada virtually identical interests in the Arctic, and it should be the first to recognize intelligent innovation on the Canadian side and be willing to meet the Canadians half way.

Fishing Zones Grow With 12-Mile Limit

OTTAWA (CP) — External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp said Friday that by extending its territorial sea to 12 miles from three, Canada can declare as exclusive fishing zones the Gulf of St. Lawrence, Bay of Fundy, Dixon Entrance, Hecate Strait and Queen Charlotte Sound.

In the Northwest Passage, it would establish Barrow Strait and Prince of Wales Strait as subject to complete Canadian sovereignty, Mr. Sharp told the Commons.

OPENS DEBATE

The minister was opening Commons debate on second reading of the government bill to extend Canada's territorial sea, a move under protest by the U.S. state department.

Earlier, the Commons completed debate on another bill the Americans say they won't recognize. It would establish 100-mile shipping safety zones in the Arctic which ships could enter only after passing a rigid inspecton by Canada.

Voting on the Arctic pollution bill was delayed until next Wednesday when the government is expected to call for a standing vote. This would show the international community that all political parties are united in the government move to protect the Arctic from disastrous oil spills or other pollution.

Mr. Sharp said the main reason Canada is acting alone in proclaiming a 12-mile territorial sea is to have effective jurisdiction to enforece anti-pollution controls off its Arctic, East and West coasts.

The new limit also would allow Canada to speed up the concluding of negotiations with European countries permitted to continue fishing in the nine-mile fishing zone now in effect.

It Was a Great Party . . . And Then the Trouble Started

By BRYAN McGILL

"Man, is this great!" we, an aging trio of 30-year-olds, agreed.

We were in the Churchill Hotel beer parlor lapping up the sudden change in atmosphere that began Wednesday when 19-year-olds were declared old enough to drink legally.

It was a Friday night in the pub we could hardly believe was happening.

The place was jammed with young people, many standing and sitting on the floor. Droves of 10 and 15 were continually going in and out of the door.

Trays of beer were sloshed away faster than the harried waiters could sling them.

HARP SOUNDS

Guitar, recorder and harp sounds could be heard in the din.

"Do you see what's tattoed on that guy's knuckles?" asked friend Tony, referring to one of the babyfaced six.

"No."

"H-A-T-E."

KIND OF CREEPY

Now there was a word that didn't fit. We looked at the pleasant peachfuzzy face again, and shrugged it off. "Kind of creepy."

But a few hours later that word best described what happened.

A curly-headed youth sitting among a dozen others had drenched a table of middle-aged men with a water pistol. That incident started it all.

A little later, after they were called by the hotel, four policemen entered the beer parlor and threaded their way nervously towards the Sundance Kid.

A chorus of "oink, oink, oink" went up from a booing, jeering crowd. The policemen looked jittery and unsure of themselves.

One policeman went around to where Sundance was sitting and informed him that they were escorting him out and that they wanted no trouble.

The youth decided to play out his role. He jumped up at the officer and shooed him back on to our table, spilling our beers.

We cursed the youth's stupidity.

The policemen quickly got Sundance under control, arm twisted behind back, and made their way towards the Langley Street exit.

The bad vibrations had started.

Highest Civilian Medal Awarded Apollo 13 Crew

ABOARD IWO JIMA (AP) — As the Apollo 13 astronauts journeyed to Hawaii aboard this ship today, President Nixon presented the Medal of Freedom to the United States space agency's flight control team and said the troubled flight was "not a failure" because it "reached the hearts of millions of people."

Standing in front of a model of the moon lander Aquarius at the spacecraft centre in Houston, President Nixon presented the highest U.S. civilian award to the Mission Control team which guided the crippled Apollo 13 flight safely back to earth.

He said he was "speaking for people all over the world" in thanking the space workers "who made it possible for the astronauts to return to earth."

REUNITED

Astronauts James A. Lovell, John L. Swigert and Fred W. Haise, will reunite with their families and meet the president in Hawaii.

Mrs. Lovell, three of her children, Mrs. Haise and her three children and the parents of Swigert, a bachelor, accompanied the presidential party from the space centre. They will fly to Hawaii aboard the presidential jet to greet the astronauts.

A score or more demonstrators stood in the crowd of several hundred as the president arrived at the space centre. They held such signs as: "Poor people care about astronauts. Who cares about poor people?"

Pair Plead Not Guilty To Assaulting Police

Two men pleaded not guilty in provincial court today to assaulting police officers, both charges arising out of a fracas Friday night at the Churchill Hotel on Government Street.

Lorne Parsons, 20, who gave his address as 1353 Pandora, pleaded not guilty to assaulting Constable Arthur Cooper, while James O. Erdman, 24, no fixed address, pleaded not guilty to assaulting Constables Ronald Stewart and Walter Sagert.

They were remanded until Monday to fix a day for trial.

A third man, William Whyte, 24, was fined $25 for causing a disturbance at the rear of the Churchill Hotel. He pleaded guilty.

He admitted being involved in a fight.

Judge William Ostler set bail at $1,000 for Parsons — as requested by Prosecutor Cory Stolte.

When the judge asked Stolte if there was any reason to request such a high bail, the prosecutor replied:

"I can only describe it as a riot — under normal circumstances."

Stolte requested bail be set at $3,000 or two sureties for Erdman, but the judge fixed it at $2,500.

In the fracas, Const. Sagert was treated at Royal Jubilee Hospital for head injures. He was released. He was struck on the ear by a beer bottle.

YOUTH SHOT DEAD IN BURN-BANK BID

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — A youth was killed by sniper fire early today as young activists broke into a Bank of America branch at nearby Goleta Valley and attempted to set it afire, sheriff's deputies said.

Sheriff's Capt. Fritz Patterson said the youth was dead on arrival at hospital.

The shooting occurred at the rear of the bank branch after the doors had been smashed and a Molotov cocktail was thrown inside, deputies said.

A Labor of Love and Philosophy Saves Tragic Children of Centre

'His Work Will Carry Right On'

By JACK SCOTT

It may seem just another staff change in a social service where change is a frequent occurrence. But for 80 or more young British Columbians the news today will have a deeper meaning.

Jim Mair is leaving Sevenoaks.

His "graduates," many of them Victoria youngsters, all of them at one time on a probable collision course with mental hospitals or imprisonment, have, in most cases, found meaningful roles in society. They're testimony to seven years of trial-and-error, bold experiment and a lot of love.

"A very significant achievement with results that will flow back into the whole program of child care."

That was the estimate of Gordon R. Wright, executive director of Victoria's Family and Children's Service, in confirming the reluctant acceptance of James B. Mair's resignation as director of the Sevenoaks Children's Centre.

For 40-year-old Jim Mair, a husky, pipe-smoking, volatile man whose own credo is summarized in his advice to young social workers — "to be an effective therapist is to be a continual learner" — the move from Victoria and the pleasant hillside treatment community on the slope of Mount Douglas is "an emotional trauma, but a need to search for something different."

Sevenoaks' reputation as a pioneering refuge for the rescue of emotionally troubled children has already brought Mair several challenging offers when he leaves Victoria on Aug. 15. He's most likely to accept a university appointment in Eastern Canada.

"This is a very exhausting kind of work and I've put a tremendous amount into it," Mair reflected. "Perhaps at this stage of my life there's more in it if I teach for the next four or five years and finish off my formal education to the doctorate level rather than continue as administrator of a specific program.

"It's a decision easier to make now than it would have been three or four years ago. We've attracted people who are strong leaders and deeply committed. We've matured professionally. Sevenoaks is no longer a kind of monastery built around a father figure. It will stand on its own."

Officials of the Family and Children's Service aren't so certain that a successor of Mair's stature will be easy to find to head Sevenoaks' 30-man staff, but executive director Wright says, "We want the same kind of dedicated man, someone like Jim who's had experience on the firing line that leads to good administration.

"Jim, himself, has made a major contribution to the whole program of family service. His work will carry right on."

It wasn't always that way. When Mair took over in February of 1963 there were just 14 youngsters at the centre. There had been upheavals in administration. Staff morale was low. Treatment techniques were varied.

A staff worker there remembers: "When Jim arrived they were putting in shatterproof glass in the buildings to keep the kids from smashing the windows."

It was understandable on that particular firing line.

The Sevenoaks kind of child has been described as the most difficult of all to treat successfully, Children with the ability to function normally, they've been emotionally crippled by early experience, generally in the home.

Some are over-active — "prone to vigorous delinquency," as the social workers' jargon has it. Some are withdrawn, headed for adult mental illness. Almost always they're suspicious, hard to reach.

"They are kids," in Mair's characteristic words, "who have had a pretty lousy start in life, kids who tend to see things in a trapped sort of way."

Mair's challenge was not merely to begin the building of a competent, dedicated team, but to evolve his own theories of effective treatment, then considered unorthodox and experimental. In both roles he seemed, at times, as a friend describes him, "a one-man band."

"Yes, that was true then," Mair agrees. "I built the place around me with a kind of charismatic leadership that seemed necessary, but could never work in the long run. Even three years ago my leaving this place might have meant it would go under.

"Now we've arrived at a clear direction in our style of treatment and the people to carry it out. We've therapists here who are better than I could be, people who've a rapport and respect for each other. We're able to look after 30 youngsters and it is continuing to develop."

How much of that style of treatment, once thought to be heretical, now generally followed in such centres, evolved from Mair's own background? Its a subject of endless speculation by those who have worked with him.

Mair himself recalls his days as a longshoring school drop-out — "I messed it up properly" — and the influence of a father he remembers as "a good, liberal, Puritan man who was always for the underdog" as motivation for his interest in young people.

Jim McConnell, executive director of the Victoria YMCA, was one of those who paved the way for Mair to enter Sir George Williams University in Montreal though he lacked the academic qualifications.

"I first saw Jim in a 'Y' leadership camp in Prince Edward Island — the place, incidentally where he met his wife, Laura," McConnell recalls. "He was only a teenager himself, then, but the way he could reach youngsters was phenomenal. It was easy to see where his life's work would take him."

In a conversation some years ago Mair described his approach to troubled children simply as "living, working and playing with youngsters in the hope that you can help them to handle their feelings."

Recently, gazing through his office window at a solitary boy gravely pedalling a bike about Sevenoaks' estate-like grounds, Mair confessed, "If the truth were known I didn't know what I was doing when it began," and went on to spell out a philosophy that might offer guide-lines for any adult dealing with any child.

"Our first task is to create an environment that frees the kid, not in a permissive way, but to allow him to deal with what scares him," he explained.

"He needs to gather into himself the kind of relationships and experiences that enable him to trust himself again and to experiment more widely with the world. You have to create a kind of living space for these youngsters where they'll be well cared for, where they'll feel their basic needs are met, where there's room for them to make mistakes without feeling that they'll be destroyed.

"There are no hard and fast rules. We keep trying to find out what makes sense. If it doesn't make sense we challenge it.

"Most youngsters who come here have had profound shocks to their learning system," he went on. "They may be aggressive or withdrawn and this, in turn, makes the world respond in certain ways.

"Teachers, for example, may become hostile. The child is caught in an ambivalence. He needs authority because without it he may not know where he is. Often he will attempt to force authority into being punitive and harsh; force you, in other words, to fit his perception. He is saying, 'It is better to know that he will beat me than not to know what he will do'."

Mair is less concerned with how the child developed this way than he is with finding methods — any methods — that will expand the child's narrow view.

He readily admits that his own approach has changed over the years.

"I'm harder now on kids than I was in the beginning," he said. "I see now that its important not to simply provide an all-absorbing, all-giving environment. The child needs to know how to negotiate the law of the street in which he's living. A lot of the world is harsh. A lot of the world is punitive. It makes crippling demands.

"Three or four years ago I'd have been much more protective against the harshness of society on the basis that the child had already had enough. Now I'm more inclined to say, 'I'll stand alongside you and help you interpret it, but it's going to be your cross, mister, not mine.' I can't carry his problem. I can only help him carry it. Three or four years ago I might have done this" — Mair opens his brown corduroy jacket like a protective wing — "and told a youngster, yes, isn't it a rotten world and Big Daddy will protect you. Now I say, 'Let's learn together what its all about'."

Like most social workers in his field Mair vacillates between optimism and pessimism.

"We're dealing, you see, with what may seem a bottomless pit," he reflected, pessimistically. "Where does the need end? Right here in Victoria there's a tremendous amount to be done. There are many more children that Sevenoaks could be serving. We're hampered because we can't recruit and train enough people who either want this kind of demanding job or know how to do it."

But, then, optimistically: "On the other hand, the services for the disturbed child have doubled in this province and in Victoria since 1964. We're more realistic and selective about our program now than we were in the beginning.

"We used to pretend that we provided a service for every kind of disturbed child. We are successful with a certain kind of youngster and determined not to be unsuccessful with another kind.

Students Shouldn't Pass Up Any Job Chance—Businessman

He was commenting on a report by youth activities director Walter Donald reiterating that the student employment picture this year appears much darker than usual. A previous report on his behalf indicated the demand for jobs far outweighs the supply.

At a directors' meeting Firday it was suggested that although some part time or low-paying jobs do come up, students frequently refuse to take them because they don't offer enough money to pay for fees, books and accommodation in the forthcoming year at university.

"We've got to get it into the student camp that an employer is not going to hire when he doesn't need help, and for goodness sake to take casual work offers when they get them. Some money is better than none," Holmes said.

A director said students from University of Victoria need work now, whereas many employers don't require bigger staff until the tourist season starts.

Donald said a Uvic survey team worked its way through the telephone directory, asking businessmen if they will be hiring a student this summer.

"The answer was predominatly 'no', or else they said they had already committed themselves to hiring help," Donald said.

From the Uvic student standpoint, there will be 1,800 job applicants this season, while at present it appears there will be openings for 500, leaving 1,300 prospective unemployed.

To some it means the difference between attending university next session, or dropping out.

The high schools are doing a survey now to gauge demand for casual workers. They are being co-ordinated by Youth Employment Service, assisted by Canada Manpower, and are cataloguing gardening, cleanup and other temporary jobs.

Two-Tone Station Wagon Sought by Fire Probers

Fire Chief Eric Simmons said today he believes a man deliberately set fire to a Bay Street apartment block early Friday, endangering the lives of 50 people and causing an estimated $100,000 damage.

The chief said a man was seen leaving the four-storey 23-suite block at 1145 Bay Street just about the time the fire alarm went off.

"He was observed for a moment to sit down in a two-tone station wagon and then to leave in a hurry," the chief said.

Simmons attributed the fire to an arsonist because the blaze was started in the elevator which was stopped at the second floor.

NO DEFECTS

"We found no evidence of mechanical or electrical defects with the elevator," he said.

Extensive damage from smoke and heat was caused in a house fire at 2414 Millstream Friday night, Langford Fire Chief, Al LeQuesne said.

The owner of the house, Stephen Jossul, was not at home when the alarm was turned in at 7:15 p.m.

The chief said he believes the fire started on the porch and spread to the bathroom. An investigation is under way.

Colwood RCMP say a fire of unknown origin Friday morning destroyed a summer cottage on the top of the Malahat highway's Tunnel Hill section. The fire started about the same time Friday as the Bay Street blaze.

Meanwhile, in Victoria Friday, coroner Edmund Jorre de St. Jorre ruled that the death of an 80-year-old woman in a fire Thursday morning was accidental.

Funeral services for Mrs. Cavanaugh will be held in Sands Memorial Chapel of Chimes on Monday at 10 a.m.

NERVE GAS PROTEST CERTAIN

Students to Map Strategy

Students from the Institute of Adult Studies will announce Monday how they plan to protest shipments of nerve gas through Juan de Fuca Strait.

Robert Munro, a spokesman, said today students participating in Operation Nerve Gas will meet over the weekend to decide on a plan of action.

Munro said one suggestion has been to hold a rally in Beacon Hill Park next Thursday or Friday and to invite officials such as members of the city council and the American consul to attend.

There is another suggestion to hold a demonstration at the Black Ball Ferry terminal on Wharf Street.

Munro said groups such as Voice of Women, SPEC and students at the University of Victoria will be informed so they can take part in the activities.

The U.S. Army has not announced a shipment date for three lethal gases from Okinawa to Bangor, Wash., and on to Hermiston, Ore.

The train trip from Washington to Oregon is considered the most hazardous segment of the journey.

IF APOLLO 13'S MISSION had gone according to plan, the earthbound would have taken landing and return pretty much for granted. For with repetition, even the fantastic becomes less compelling. Another successful moon shot, flawless technology aiding? . . . . So what else is new in the galaxy!

An aborted mission fouled up by technological failure was something else again. It humanized space.

The astronauts become men confronted by crisis and burdened with man's ancient dilemma: how to even the odds against survival with the tools available.

It's true that technology hadn't failed them entirely. Also, they had such direction as computerized science could give then from earth. But here was a problem in human terms — three of our own in grave danger — and it affected us as a precisely machined operation could never have done.

Had the descent been routine, a crowd would still have watched the screens in New York's Grand Central station. But the crowd, I suggest, would have been smaller. And the faces, as Odyssey bobbed in the Pacific with stabilizing balloons atop like Mickey-Mouse ears, wouldn't have advertised emotion so openly.

Certainly this earthling would have been less interested. As it was, I went off growling at circumstance on Friday morning to address some junior high students.

Better if they, and I, were rooting for man at a climax of adventure.

"They're watching television" the school librarian told me when I checked in. Then, with the merest hint of a question in his tone, "I suppose we'd better break that up."

The hint was enough. We didn't break it up. Instead, I made it home in time to see the triumphant end of a failure more significant in human terms than success.

LAST SEPTEMBER WITHout waiting to be called in, I put my car through the motor vehicle testing station and drove off with a red sticker on the windshield.

That was that, I thought, until September rolled round again.

This week a letter from the Motor Vehicle branch turned up in my mail. My car would be banned from the blacktop as of April 30 unless it had acquired a valid testing station sticker for its windshield by that date.

Typed at the bottom of this form sheet was a paragraph stating that if the required seal of approval was already in place, all I need do was supply th testing station with the certificate number.

This is double-talk. It is also stupidity. And further, it suggests that this particular arm of government isn't keeping its right hand informed of what its left hand doeth.

When a car has successfully run the testing station gauntlet, it is mere rudimentary bookkeeping that notice of the fact should go into the headquarters files.

If this isn't being done — and if it is, why these redundant warnings to ruffled red-stickered citizens? — the branch should lose no time in amending its procedure.

A CALL THIS WEEK from a mother, registered nurse by profession, whose daughter is enrolled in a baby-sitting course laid on by Saanich fire department.

"The department is doing a wonderful job," the RN said. "I thought I knew all about the care and safeguarding of small children. But my daughter is learning details that opened my eyes."

On the strength of this recommendation, I checked with a department which has seized smartly on one way to increase safety in the home.

There are 50 students in the present baby-sitters' seminar, which meets from 7 to 9 p.m. each Monday evening in Reynolds senior secondary. Boys as well as girls have been taking the eight-lesson course, and I understand that at least one grandma also attends.

I can also report that young Snooks, the RN's daughter, was greatly impressed when one of the firemen brought a real live baby from his home for demonstration. This rates as devotion beyond the call of duty.
